OUR SALT LAKE CITY CORRESPONDENCE.

Interruption of the Overland Mail Communication by the Indians—Troops Ordered to Protect the Mails—Street Fights in Salt Lake City—Governor Cumming Fic-Nicing with the Saints, &c.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, U. T., Saturday, Sept. 4, 1858.

We regret exceedingly to learn that our present great, central, overland mail communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific, through this city, has been interrupted by the Indians.

Last Saturday the conductor of the California mail, due on that day, arrived in this city without his mail. It appears that on or about the 20th of last month, as the mail party—consisting of but two men—were camping for the night at the lower crossing of the Humboldt River, a large band of Indians suddenly came upon them and took possession of everything which they had, mules, harness, provisions and, more important than all, the mail. The men escaped with their lives by hiding, at the first approach of the Indians, in the brush along the river, and remaining concealed until their departure. They then made their way on foot to the next station, where they procured animals and came on as rapidly as possible to this city.

Immediately upon the receipt of this information Dr. FORNEY, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, made a requisition, through Gov. CUMMING, upon Gen. JOHNSON for a body of troops to be sent down as soon as possible to the Humboldt River, to protect the mails and emigration from these hostile Indians. In consequence of which Gen. JOHNSON, with commendable promptness, has ordered two companies of Dragoons and two of Infantry to start immediately for that portion of the route to California. Companies C and H, of the Second Dragoons, in command of Capt. HAWS, and a company from both the Tenth and Fifth Regiments of Infantry will leave the Camp to-day on this duty.

It is believed that the Indians who attacked the mail were a band of the Oregon Indians who have come down and united with the "Digger" snakes on the Humboldt for the express purpose of robbing and murdering this year's emigration to California and Oregon.

Superintendent FORNEY will start during the coming week to overtake the troops and visit the tribes along the Humboldt, and discover their feelings and intentions. We hope soon to hear of a definite settlement of accounts with these Indians, who have committed so many depredations and shocking murders for several seasons past upon the overland emigration.

We are informed that Superintendent FORNEY, upon his arrival here, sent out to these same Indians a quantity of presents as a token of his good will towards them, among which there was sent, very inconsiderately, a considerable amount of powder and lead.

It is to be regretted that it was deemed more prudent under the existing circumstances to send the 6th Infantry to the seat of war in Oregon by way of San Francisco instead of directly overland by the regular Oregon trail, not only in consequence of the greater length of the adopted route, but in consequence of the opportunity thus lost of attacking the Indians in their rear and surrounding them.

As it is, the Indians now so hostile in Oregon Territory have but little to fear from the troops, for, coming as they do all from the coast, they have only to watch them and fight them on that side, and if in the conflict they find themselves beaten and disabled, the way is perfectly open to retreat across the mountains into the buffalo country, where they can recruit their horses, obtain fresh supplies of provisions, and prepare to renew their attacks upon the whites at the first opportunity. The only way to cope successfully with these Indians is to cut off their hope of retreating to recruit, and thus finally conquer them, if not by force of arms alone, by famine and fatigue; for, these Indians depending mainly upon the buffalo for their support, they feel perfectly independent and fearless of consequences, as long as they can obtain a full supply of it.

Our city has lately been the scene of an unusual number of street fights. In one of these encounters GEORGE GRANT, brother of the late JEREDIAH GRANT who was BRIGHAM's second Counsellor and the Third President of the Church, received a black eye, and has since been fined $100, and bound over in the sum of $1,000 to keep the peace for one year.

On the 1st inst., a negro and a mulatto in the employ of Marshal DOTSON—named FRANK POSEY and ROBERT TAYLOR—got into a quarrel, which resulted in the death of the former. POSEY having stabbed TAYLOR in the forehead, he immediately shot POSEY with a revolver, killing him instantly. Upon examination before the Justice of the Peace, TAYLOR was acquitted on the ground of justifiable homicide.

On Tuesday night last, the large two-story house of Mr. NEBEKER was burned to the ground. The fire originated accidentally. Fires are of such rare occurrence here that when one does break out it forms quite an event. The houses here being all built separately and surrounded by gardens, (except on the principal business street,) there is no danger of the spread of a fire, and consequently we have no Fire Department in this city.

Governor CUMMING and lady lately visited Cottonwood Cañon—the spot on which BRIGHAM and his confederates declared their Independence,—in company with BRIGHAM YOUNG and family, and a select company of the "Saints." The party were absent some four days on this "pic-nic," and, the time was pleasantly spent in dancing, singing, speaking, &c.

The United States Judges ECKLES and SHOCKLEE and Secretary HASKNELL are still absent on their trip to Fillmore, where they went to appoint the times for holding the United States Courts in this Territory. They are accompanied by an escort of two companies of dragoons.

Before leaving this city, Secretary HASKNELL refused to give commissions to the members elect of the Legislature from this County in consequence of the illegal proceedings during the late election. This will render a new election necessary.

Col. LANDER, Superintendent of the Fort Kearney South Pass and Honey Lake wagon road, spent a few days in this city during the past week. He has succeeded during the Summer in constructing an excellent wagon road from the South Pass along the base of the Wind River Mountains, intersecting the old road again on Bear River. This new cut-off, besides being much shorter than the old road, is preferable in consequence of the more abundant and frequent supplies of water, wood and grass. It is probable that Col. LANDER will return with his party to the States this Fall, instead of attempting to Winter in the mountains.

Chief Justice ECKLES will return to the States about the 1st of next month, he having obtained leave of absence for three months, to enable him to visit his family in Indiana.

We noticed whilst out riding in this valley, recently, a phenomenon, which, we were informed, is very common in this country—namely: spouts, or columns of dust, rising from the ground as far up as the eye can reach. The one we saw was formed by a whirlwind, which gradually caused it to rise until its summit disappeared among the clouds. It appeared to be about the size, in circumference, of an ordinary hogshead, and did not vary in diameter. About midway there was a long, graceful curve in this slender pillar, which seemed to connect the heavens and the earth. It maintained its position about five minutes, and then rapidly disappeared. These dust spouts are formed in the same manner as the water-spouts upon the ocean, although the dust, from its light character, rises more readily and to a greater height.

We know not whether history gives the reason why the crooks or staffs of the shepherds, in the ancient classical periods, were bent or crooked at the ends but perhaps the shepherd-boys of Utah will furnish us with the reason. We met, a few days since, two lit tle boys herding their flocks of sheep, each holding in his hand a perfect crook. It was the stalk of a sunflower, stripped of its leaves and bent over by the weight of the flower, which still remained, until it resembled perfectly the representations which we have of the classical shepherd's crook.

The sunflower grows like a weed throughout these valleys, and becomes a perfect nuisance to the farmer.

The Indians are now busy picking the seeds of these wild flowers, which they esteem as an excellent article of food. A. B. C.

ST. LOUIS, Saturday, Oct. 2.

The Salt Lake mail reached St. Joseph on the 25th ult., 21 days out. The Mormons were quiet and orderly at the time of departure. A violent snow storm was encountered by the train west of Laramie. The Indians on the route were quiet. The weekly Santa Fé mail left Independence on the 28th ult. H. A. SMITH, Receiver of Public Moneys, and Mr. REAGAN, were among the passengers.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Oct. 3.

The Postmaster-General denies that he has fixed upon a spot for the New-York Post-Office. He says that he could decide between the propositions before him in five minutes, but that it is by no means certain that he will accept of either. The proposition to build in conjunction with the City on the upper part of the Park would have been favorably considered, had not the corporation contended for the disbursement of the money. Postmaster-General BROWN designs holding the purse-strings himself. His judgment favors the square west of Broadway and near Canal-street, in the neighborhood of the Collins steamer wharves, but he says the popular objection is, "it is not the centre." He left New-York deeply impressed with the idea that your people, in all the transactions of life, aimed for the "centre."

Judge BOWLIN's instructions are now in the hands of the President for his revision. Otherwise everything is ready for the Paraguay Expedition to move.

It is seriously apprehended by the Government here that the running of the boundary line between Texas and the Indian Territory will lead to hostilities. These Indians have no idea that they are hemmed in on the West, and they will resist any attempt to draw a line in their rear. It is believed that the Federal Government will have to purchase another slice of Texas territory for Indian purposes. Q.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Oct. 2.

During September, 970 warrants were issued from the Pension-Office, to satisfy which 148,000 acres of land were necessary.

Mr. A. O. DAYTON, Fourth Auditor in the Treasury Department, intelligence of whose death in Philadelphia was, this morning, received, had been in office about 25 years.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Oct. 3.

Mr. SAMUEL SAMUELS, of Brooklyn, N. Y., recently obtained a patent for "certain new and useful improvements in the laying of submarine telegraph cables." What he claims is, passing the cable from the ship or vessel through the bottom thereof, at or near the point by him specified. He also claims the employment, to conduct the cable to the bottom of the vessel, and to exclude the water from the opening in the bottom where the cable leaves it, of a tube, the whole or the lower part of which has a downward inclination toward the stern of the vessel, substantially as and for the purpose specified.

OWEN G. WARREN, of New-York, has also received a patent for a similar purpose. His plan for laying the cable is to wind it on a reel immersed in the water, nearly to the surface, and tow it across the Ocean. To this end he would make the cable only so much more than the specific gravity of the water as would be requisite to sink it with the necessary rapidity.

BOSTON, Sunday, Oct. 3.

Yesterday, in response to an announcement from Lieutenant ALEXANDER, United States Engineer, that the foundation of the new Light-house on Minot's Ledge was ready for the corner-stone, the City Government, officers of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons, and numerous invited guests, proceeded to Cohasset for the purpose of formally consecrating the event with Masonic ceremonies, &c.

The weather was too rough to allow of a visit to the Ledge, and the exercises, which were of an interesting character, took place on shore. Lieut. ALEXANDER received the party with a brief statement concerning the work as far as it had progressed. Mayor LINCOLN then made some remarks, which were followed by the usual Masonic ceremonies on such occasions, Hon. JNO. T. HEARD, Grand Master, officiating. Addresses followed by Hon. EDWARD EVERETT, LEWIS B. COMINS and others. The party did not return till a late hour on Saturday evening.

The Pacific Wagon Road.

ST. LOUIS, Saturday, Oct. 2.

Letters from the Pacific Wagon Expedition, dated Big Sandy, Oregon, Sept. 7, say that Colonel LANDER was pushing the work with all possible dispatch, with hopes of reaching Soda Springs before the bad weather sets in. Two hundred miles of road were finished, and an additional force is now at work beyond Salt River. The expedition will winter at Laramie. Colonel LANDER starts for Washington on the 5th of October. The Indians were healthy. The health of the expedition was good.

The western papers contain very contradictory accounts relative to the South Platte gold diggings.

Fatal Wagon Accident.

TROY, N. Y., Sunday, Oct. 3.

THEODORE DURKIN, of this city, formerly of SHELDON's Band of New-York City, was accidentally killed at about 1 o'clock this morning, while riding with a friend in a wagon near Eighth-street. In attempting to turn round, the horse and wagon were precipitated down a precipice fifty feet on to the Troy and Boston Railroad track, killing the horse and driver.

There were six interments to-day, of which three were from yellow fever.

A NOVEL VIEW OF THE "BOND" SLAVER CASE.—The Guardian is a little paper published at Columbia, South Carolina, which is somewhat given to fire-eating and plain speech. An article on the Echo slaver case puts forth a fresh idea on a subject that was pretty well worn. The editor expresses himself in this wise:

"The slaves on board the Echo were regularly sold by the Africans, and purchased by the captain of the Echo. They were, therefore, his bona fide property, and we think the officers of the Dolphin committed piracy, if there be piracy in the matter, by forcibly taking possession of property that did not belong to them. Before leaving the prison, the interpreter informed us that when a native African committed a crime, he is killed by the Chief, and his family sold to the slavers. The crew of the Echo will be here in a few days. Let them come; we hazard the assertion that not a hair of their heads will be harmed.

Since writing the above, we have learned that the crew of the Dolphin have been allowed the privilege of the entire use of the jail building."

POLITICAL.

Democratic Ratification Meeting—Captain Ryders Hissed.

The Democratic State Nominations were ratified on Saturday night by the Metropolitan Club, at a public meeting held in Stuyvesant Institute. The lecture-room was crowded. Judge S. S. HOWLAND was called to the chair, and a long list of Vice-Presidents and Secretaries was submitted and approved.

Mr. CHARLES O. RICHARDSON presented a series of resolutions indorsing the State ticket headed by AMASA J. PARKER, pitching into the Republicans, charging them with attempting to sell out the Erie Canal to further the railroad monopoly, denouncing Albany interference in the municipal affairs of this City, and indorsing the administration of JAMES BUCHANAN.

Mr. RICHARDSON supported the resolutions in a speech which was loudly cheered. The resolutions were adopted. Letters from Judge PARKER and the Hon. JOHN COCHRANE were read and vociferously applauded.

General WALBRIDGE made a brief speech, which elicited unbounded plaudits. In the meantime some of the officers of the meeting detected Captain RYDERS in the crowd, and conducted him to the platform amid cheers and hisses. After the General had resumed his seat the crowd indulged in cries for WOOD and RYDERS, which were not hushed until they were informed by the Chairman that Mr. WOOD was not in the room.

Captain RYDERS was then introduced, and said he got up more for the purpose of an explanation than to make a speech. He wanted to show them that being invited by this club he conceived it his duty as a Democrat to come among them as Democrats, working officially for the Democratic Party. A few years past he had been President of a Democratic Club himself. What that club had done for the Democratic Party he would leave them to judge. He believed it had not done any harm, and was certain it had done some good. He wished to give the gentleman who first spoke a little advice. He had spoken of the divisions among the opposing parties, but they should be very careful they did not inaugurate a system that would produce divisions in their own, and allow the Republicans and Americans to obtain a victory in this City. While giving this good advice to his friends, personal as well as political—for General WALBRIDGE used the term, though he never was his (the Captain's) personal friend nor was he his personal enemy, and he (the Captain) had nothing to say against him politically, and certainly he could not say much against him, because he knew little about him—whilst giving this good advice, he wished to say one thing to this club in particular, and that was that they should be careful not to split up the Democratic Party, lest the Republicans and Americans might point them out as divided and sure of being beaten. Now, with the Republican and American forces divided, it looked to him as if the friends of JAMES BUCHANAN in the State were about to obtain a great political victory, and he believed they all admitted that JAMES BUCHANAN, the respectable leader of the Democratic masses in this contest, was entitled to the suffrages of the Democracy of New-York. [Cheers.] He (the Captain) was here to say also that he was for the Tammany Hall organization against everything else. [Cheers and hisses.] That was their business, not his. If they were against it that was their own affair, but he was not against it, and he claimed the right to have his opinion and would let them have theirs. [A Voice—"That is right."] He did not want anything but what was right. He had done wrong in his life, he knew, but he supposed the difference between him and them in that respect, was that they were too modest to acknowledge it. [Confusion.] He did not care who they were for, or who they were against. They knew they could not give him as good an office as he now held. [A Voice—It should be given to some one deserving of it.] Now, replied the Captain, if you can get ten honest Democrats to testify that you are better entitled to my office than I am, then I will resign it to you, intelligent and honest Democrat that you are. [A Voice—Speak about the candidates.] Well, I tell you, upon my soul, my friend, if you make this speech for me, I will give way and treat the whole company to a basket of champagne. [Cries of "Woop."] Now, fellow Democrats, I will quit immediately. I have had no opportunity of speaking on the subject at all. I hope, however, that every Democrat will sustain the nominations of the Democratic Party. [A Voice—We will not be hypocrites.] That means that you will vote the Republican ticket; I hope in God you will. [Confusion.] Now, gentlemen, if I have afforded you any amusement, so much the better, for I know I have given you no information, having had no opportunity to do so. I only got up in courtesy to the gentlemen who invited me here, and if I had been treated with civility, as I would have treated anybody I had invited to speak at one of my meetings, I might have gone on and made a speech. [Cries of "Go on."] No, I won't. It's impossible. Now, gentlemen, I am going out, and I hope these people will make no more disturbance. If I did anything offensive, you can take your revenge outside. I will just show that these gentlemen, though I am alone, will find it their best policy to let me alone. [Terrific confusion, groans, hisses, cries of "Kick him out!" "Turn him out!" and "Three cheers for Captain RYDERS!"] Mr. Chairman and gentlemen— [A Voice—"You have got no business here." ANOTHER VOICE—"Turn him out!"] Gentlemen, it is but one man's business to put me out. Let the others preserve quiet and let that gentleman up there come down here and put me out if he can. [Cheers and hisses.] I was invited here by your club, gentlemen.

[Here the confusion became so great that the Chairman was obliged to get up, if possible, to obtain order. Gentlemen, he said, one single moment. I hope that the gentlemen here are Democrats, and that at least ordinary courtesy and propriety will be observed.]

Peace was again partially restored, and the Captain proceeded: I had no desire, as you saw, to address you at all; and I had but a word or two to say, at the best. [A Voice—"You cannot say it."] That fellow, probably, is some one who picked my pocket, and I have had him in prison; I suppose he seeks some opportunity to repeat, but I have no money about me, my friend. [Hisses and applause. A Voice—"There was a time when you had very little money that you earned decently." ANOTHER VOICE—"Let the Captain speak, will ye."] It is very hard for me to speak while there are a few blackguards trying to prevent me. I am very happy, for the credit of your Club, that there are so few among you. I am very happy to have the opportunity of speaking before your Club. [A VOICE—"And I'm —— sorry for it." Laughter and hisses.] Gentlemen, I have spoken before one forty times bigger. [A VOICE—"Shame on them for letthin' you."]

Here a young gentleman, with long hair and cadaverous aspect, who had been very officious on the platform, rushed forward, and gesticulating furiously, said: I tell you, gentlemen, that RYDERS will speak, let what [will come; bloodshed, or not. The confusion now attained its height, and could be compared to nothing but the sea in a tempest. Everybody was shouting at the top of his voice, and for two or three minutes no one sound was discernible in the deafening roar.

At length the Chairman succeeded in obtaining a hearing. Gentlemen, said he, do now, for Heaven's sake, keep quiet! [Cries of "We will."] Gentlemen, we are here as Democrats—we are here for one common cause. [A VOICE—And there's a black sheep here, too.] Gentlemen, one moment. The gentleman who is here to address you has long been a hard-working Democrat of the City of New-York, of the State of New-York, and of the nation at large. He is here as an invited guest, and I hope that you will show that we can at least exercise ordinary courtesy and civility.

This appeal had the desired effect. A call for "Three cheers for RYDERS" was heard, without eliciting any very great opposition, and the speaker was encouraged by cries of "Now, go on, Captain." The Captain accordingly went on:

Well, gentlemen, I regret very much that I should have innocently been the cause of dissatisfaction to even some three or four of you. I am certain that it was the intention of these gentlemen here on the stand to treat me with civility, and I generally manage, when people treat me with civility, to return the same civility to them. [Cheers.] With all respect for the views and opinions of these gentlemen here, who doubtless have been working for the Democratic Party for some four or five years, whilst I have been working for it for thirty years, it would be presumptuous in me to say that the different cliques of the Democratic Party have always been right in everything, but I have always endeavored to be right; if I was wrong, it was an error of the head, not of the heart. [Applause.]

The Captain withdrew, amid some cheering. The resolutions were then put by the Chair, and adopted unanimously. Speeches were made by CONRAD SHACKNASSE and others, and the meeting finally broke up in good humor.

"The 'Regulars' and Fernando Wood."

OUR REPORTER'S ACCURACY VINDICATED—FULLER REPORT OF MR. WOOD'S ATTACK ON TAMMANY.

We published on Friday last an article purporting to be a condensed report of the proceedings at a meeting of the "General Committee of Regulars" held on the preceding Tuesday at Mozart Hall. Last Saturday we published a letter signed "A Regular," contradicting categorically almost every statement in our report, "A Regular" asserting that he was present at the meeting in question, and that no such speech as that furnished us by our reporter was delivered by FERNANDO WOOD, whose presence on the occasion, however, as a member of the "Regular's Committee" from the Twenty-second Ward, was not denied.

Under these circumstances our reporter feels called upon to vindicate the accuracy of his various statements, and has therefore applied to several members of the Regular General Committee, who were present at the time, to corroborate the specific correctness of his condensed report. Amongst those gentlemen so applied to, and to whom our reporter would refer, are Messrs. Thos. J. BEST, Sixth Ward; Geo. W. HOSMER, Eleventh Ward; Michael Murphy, Fifth Ward; James Gallagher, Eighth Ward; John Hardy, Twentieth Ward; John Orr, Thirteenth Ward; Peter McKnight, Eleventh Ward; Wm. Wilson, First Ward; Maurice Keating, Sixth Ward; Thomas Smith, Seventh Ward; James Shaw, Thirteenth Ward; John Reilly, Eleventh Ward; Weare Drake Parsons, Eighteenth Ward, and many others not necessary to be mentioned. It will be seen by this list that he quotes the names of men still devoted to FERNANDO WOOD, as well as those of men opposed to him.

The speech made by Mr. WOOD shall now be given more at length. "A Regular" says that "Mr. WOOD made no personal attack upon E. F. FOWLER and Wm. D. KENNEDY, nor was the name of JOHN KELLY mentioned, nor was there the most indirect allusion to them." Now, our reporter says, and the gentlemen above named will sustain him, that Mr. WOOD entered the hall, (not Mozart, but) No. 103 Bowery, at 9 o'clock on last Tuesday night; that he was received with three rounds of applause, and sat down; the EDWARD TOMSON then presented to Mr. GERRY, who was in the Chair, the credentials of members from the Twenty-second Ward, on which credentials the name of FERNANDO WOOD appeared; that Mr. WOOD was nominated for temporary Chairman, but declined, and took part in the election of JAMES MULLIGAN (Fourteenth, Mr. KELLY's, Ward) to that responsible office; that Mr. WOOD worked hard to reflect GERRIT C. GERRY, and that Mr. THOMAS J. BEAN headed the opposition in favor of Col. RYAN; that FERNANDO WOOD, JAMES LYNCH (Mr. KELLY's Ward) and DAN. WHITE, acted as Inspectors of Election, and, of course, returned their own candidate (for whom all three Inspectors voted) by an alleged vote of 31 to 25, although by the by-laws of the General Committee of Regulars (Section 3) a majority of the whole Committee was required; that Mr. WOOD himself wrote out those returns and handed them to the temporary Chairman. This done GERRY rose and returned thanks. There was then a cry for WOOD amongst his own adherents, and in answer thereto Mr. WOOD walked up the aisle, took his stand beside the chairman on the raised platform, and spoke substantially as follows:

MR. WOOD'S SPEECH.

He returned thanks for the unexpected warmth of his reception, and then immediately opened on the "traitors in Tammany Hall" who had defeated him when last a candidate for the Mayoralty. "TWEEDLEDEE WEED," he said, "has got more influence in Tammany Hall than I have. When he comes to New-York all he has to do is to call on JOHN A. KENNEDY in Castle Garden; go from there to Barclay-street and see Jem's brother, Wm. D. KENNEDY; go from there to the Post-Office and see ISAAC V. FOWLER and NIMROD J. WARREN, and from there to a lawyer's office in Nassau-street. I would consider myself a traitor," went on Mr. WOOD, "were I now to desert you." (with a wave of his hand round the room,) "who stood by me in my hour of need. When I was defeated last Fall, I made up my mind that I would retire to the bosom of my family to pay them that attention which my political career had heretofore prevented. But the Tammany traitors would not allow me; they hunted me from hole to corner, until I am now like a stag at bay."

Mr. WOOD then took up the name of JOHN KELLY, and spoke of that gentleman in the precise words given in our report of last Friday, with the exception that our informants cannot remember the phrase "Standard bearer of the Regulars," though the idea therein conveyed was exactly that set forth by Mr. WOOD. He spoke of KELLY as their "strongest friend—as the candidate of their organization;" and wound up this part of his discourse by asserting that he (FERNANDO) "would spend every dollar of his private fortune to vindicate you, gentlemen," (with another wave of his hand round the room,) "who stood by me in my hour of trial."

He then went on to denounce Tammany Hall in the most embittered terms, asserting that the "Tammany Hall General Committee consisted of creatures of the Tammany Society, who never polled more than three hundred and fifty votes at any election; and that nearly one-half of this Society, including the chairman of the Black Republican General Committee, were Black Republicans, Know-Nothings and bogus Democrats." He then struck a picturesque attitude and assured the meeting that he "had left Tammany Hall forever, and would fight against it to the death. Gentlemen," he added, "this is my first appearance here, but you always knew that my sympathies were with you, and for the future I shall be amongst you at every opportunity. Were I to do otherwise I could no longer claim the title of an honest man." [At this there was some cheering and a good deal of laughter.] Mr. WOOD then went on to state that he "had recently visited Mr. BUCHANAN, by whom he had been asked what the difference was between the Tammany organization and the Society of Regulars; and that he had replied 'The Tammany body represents 250 Black Republicans, Know Nothings and bogus Democrats, while the Society of Regulars represent the 41,000 electoral voters who stood at my back last election.' I further told Mr. BUCHANAN" (said the speaker) "that he could not rely on the Tammany organization, and that he would find out in his hour of need that the 'Regulars' were his only friends in the City."

The subsequent proceedings of the Regulars on last Friday night appear to be the natural sequel of the policy marked out in the speech. The "Resolutions" then adopted, denouncing the State Convention and HERMAN SCHAUFF as its Chairman, were drawn up and offered by the Hon. FERNANDO WOOD in person—a fact very carefully excluded from the official "Regulars" report in the Custom-House organ. The organ also made a mistake in saying that "these resolutions were unanimously adopted," as 19 members voted for laying them on the table.

FIRST ASSEMBLY DISTRICT.—The Republican Convention for the First Assembly District had an adjourned meeting on Saturday evening, at the Clinton House, No. 19 Beekman-street, and unanimously nominated GEORGE L. GARDNER, of the First Ward, for Assembly.

Letter from the Hon. Washington Hunt.

ALBANY, Thursday, Sept. 30, 1858.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter inviting me to address the meeting to be held at the Capitol to-morrow evening, has been placed in my hands during my brief stay in this city, and I regret that circumstances will not allow me to accept the invitation. It would give me pleasure to attend and express my views on the present aspect of political affairs, but an imperative engagement compels me to be at home to-morrow.

I must avail myself of the occasion to assure you that my political position remains unchanged. I am still a national Whig, and continue to cherish those beneficent and conservative principles which I have so long maintained through good and through evil report. I had hoped to see a cordial and effective union formed by the people opposed to the present national Administration, on such just, moderate and national principles of public policy, and in such a liberal spirit of toleration as would enable conservative men in all parts of the Union to combine their strength and act together for the common good of the country. That a large majority of the opposition masses desired and still look forward to such a union cannot be questioned.

But unfortunately, so far as our own State is concerned, the efforts for union hitherto made have proved abortive. From causes which I have no time to discuss, the endeavors of the Conventions at Syracuse to remove the obstacles which divide the opposition into distinct organizations were not successful, and the American Party had no alternative but to proceed and nominate a ticket. In the selection of candidates they made a most judicious and satisfactory choice.

Under these circumstances I am prepared to give a cordial and earnest support to LORENZO BURROWS and his associate nominees, whose nomination you propose to ratify. My personal and official relations with Mr. MORGAN were always of a friendly character, and I regretted the political differences which separated us; but I consider it no disparagement of other candidates to say that Mr. BURROWS is eminently entitled to the public confidence. I have known him long and well. He is a man of high intelligence, patriotic aims and unsullied integrity. In positions of great responsibility he has exhibited superior qualifications for public usefulness. He has been always found faithful to his trust.

Whatever may be the result of the pending election I will indulge in the hope that the people of the United States who honestly desire to reform the Administration of the Government, will rise above party spirit, shake off the trammels of temporary organizations, and form one great national organization before the next Presidential contest. To be effective, it must be based upon national principles, which shall unite all portions of our common country by the ties of paternal and patriotic sentiment. A movement of this character is demanded by high considerations of duty, and I trust the time is not distant when it may be inaugurated under favorable auspices, and prosecuted to a successful and glorious issue. With great regard, I remain yours truly, WASHINGTON HUNT.

The Administration Organ on the Philadelphia "Bonne Bouche."

The sharp Address of Col. FORNEY has called out a reply from the Union. That paper of Saturday, under the title of "The Philadelphia Bonne Bouche," proceeds to the administration of a violent dose to the Colonel. The vindication is voted a lame affair, and the Union labors to prove that the Colonel is exciting sympathy under false pretences. We give a specimen of this rejoinder:

"There are no private letters in the Visitation from

HAVANA.

Arrival of the Cahawba at Charleston.

The United States mail steamship Cahawba at Charleston, from Havana, brings our files and correspondence from the latter point to the 26th ult.

The British West India Royal mail steamer Solway, LAWS, Commander, arrived from St. Thomas on the evening of the 21st, with Southampton mails to the 24th inst. She left on the 24th for Vera Cruz and Tampico.

Several passengers, of former Mexican and Santa Anna fame, were on their way to Vera Cruz, on a secret mission from the unseen Chief, to find pleas for an entering wedge in his behalf, well stuck with gold pulse-feelers, or patriot-feelers. They had interviews on shore with several Mexican and Spanish officials, including the son of Hi Excmo Highness.

The sugar market remains quiet; buyers decline taking, save at ⅛ to 1 rial less than quotations. Nos. 11 and 12 held at $5 37½ to $5 50 (or 11¼ to 11½ rials ⅌ arroba.) Stock 130,000 boxes, against 200,000 same time last year.

MOLASSES—No takers at 5 rials ⅌ keg for clayed; very dull, and stock light.

LUMBER—No sales of Pitch Pine Lumber—first arrivals will pay.

RICE—Sales of Carolina at 6¾ ⅌ 100 lbs.; India, $5 50 to $5 75.

FREIGHTS—No demand; rates nominal; no vessels of the United States down the past week.

EXCHANGES—London at 19@19½ premium, 60 days; New-York, 4¼@4½, 60 days; New-Orleans, 5@5½, short sight. United States gold coin 5 premium; none for sale.

The health of Havana is good; on the bay, among strange shipping, they continue to have fever cases, but of much less malignant type than early in the season. The weather has changed to cool storms, almost a norther—and the skies answered by the barometer threatening.

Conference of German Societies—Protection for Emigrants.

The Board of Directors of the German Benevolent Societies of New-York recently issued a call, inviting all the German Societies in the United States to convene at New-York, to take measures for making public the ill-treatment received by German emigrants, on ship-board and after their arrival in this country, with a view to inducing Congress to pass a law immediately for their protection.

In accordance with this call, delegates from German Societies in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Maryland, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, and Missouri, assembled at Pythagoras Hall, in Canal-street, last Friday. Mr. SCHUMACHER, Sr., of Baltimore, was elected President; Mr. JELLINEHAUS, of New-York, Vice-President, and Messrs. FRANKENBACH and DREXNER, of New-Jersey, Secretaries. After a short preliminary meeting the members of the Conference paid a visit to Castle Garden, which establishment they inspected in all its details. The delegates generally seemed pleased with what they saw there. At 10½ o'clock on Saturday morning, the delegates met again at Pythagoras Hall. Letters were read from various Societies not represented in the Conference, rendering excuses for their neglect to send delegates.

The next business in order was the report of the Board of Directors of New-York.

Mr. JELLINEHAUS read a lengthy document from the German Benevolent Society in Greenwich-street established in this City about 70 years ago. In this country of materialism, he said, humanitarian principles are generally looked at rather with great indifference, nay indolence, especially in our great cities; but there are so many palpable facts which speak out imperiously even to the most indolent heart, that new efforts towards social improvements must and be released. The terrible incidents of latter days on the high sea, the brutal treatment of passengers by officers of vessels—the ticket-swindle and bogus offices in several places, are in everybody's knowledge; they are of daily occurrence, and discourage new settlers to embark for this fine and great country. Besides these vicissitudes, secret agents, literary quacks and recently a German paper, the Allgemeine Auswanderung Zeitung, of Rudolstadt, are calumniating daily the United States, for the purpose of diverting the stream of emigration from our shores towards South America, Brazil and other countries where the Europeans hitherto have never returned but with empty pockets and without a shirt on their backs; while here, in this country, every laborer gets good wages and is able to make his fortune. Well, gentlemen, in the name and with the full consent of the New-York Board of Directors of the German Society, I beg to submit to you the following propositions:

1st. To publish a treatise in which an impartial description of the different countries of the United States is given, with full particulars in geological, physical, agricultural and other respects; thus enabling the emigrant to learn where to settle best, according to his responsibility.

2. To work for the suppression of all booking offices in Europe for the interior of America.

3. To sign a petition to Congress taking several new shipping regulations, amongst which we only enumerate:—

(a.) Complete separation of females and males on board the ships, married couples naturally excepted.

(b.) No other surgeons shall be engaged on board but those who have passed their examinations and produce diplomas for having taken high degrees.

(c.) The owners and captains of vessels have to guarantee the safe delivery of baggage, and remain responsible in case of loss towards the passengers.

Some debate followed with regard to the first proposition, and the Conference finally adopted the following:

Resolved, That we invite all German Societies and other Corporations to furnish the New York Board of the German Society quarterly with such information as might be useful for the emigrants at their landing at the different Eastern ports of the United States.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted, with regard to the recommendation in the second proposition, after discussion:

Resolved—1. To publish in the newspapers throughout the whole country, as well as in Europe, warnings against buying tickets for the interior of the United States.

2. To confer with the different American Railroad Companies for the suppression of all booking offices in Europe.

3. To ask the intervention of the Executive power at Washington for the purpose of inducing the foreign Consuls and Ambassadors to exert themselves in favor of the suppression of the booking system where it still exists, (France, Great Britain, Belgium, Switzerland, partly; Baden, Wurtemberg, &c., &c.)

Many other suggestions for the protection of the emigrant were made, but no other definite action was taken. The Conference adjourned to meet at 10 A. M. to-day. Saturday, many of the delegates inspected some of the emigrant ships in port.

The Canadian Crystal Palace.

From the Toronto Globe.

The new Provincial Crystal Palace is situated on the west of Toronto, and is distant about a mile and a half from the centre of the city. It occupies a high and commanding situation, having an excellent view of the harbor and lake; and being adjacent to the Grand Trunk and Northern Railways, it is easily accessible. There are four entrances, one from the west, north and south, the first of which crosses the railway, and is approached through an element arch 22 by 16 feet. The walls are constructed in a style (a measure of observed glass (similar to that used in the Dublin Exhibition Building,) which, when taken in the composition of the roof, and the element arch in the transepts being of the same material, is intended the double purpose of diffusing a subdued light throughout the building, and of excluding the glaring heat experienced in this quarter of the globe. The remainder of the roof is of wood, painted white, which at a great distance may be seen glittering in the sunlight. The structure is upheld and braced firmly together by cast-iron pillars and girders, which at once add to the graceful appearance of the building and are the source of its security and stability. The dimensions are 216 feet in length by 144 feet in breadth. The building has been erected within a space of upwards of twenty acres of land, inclosed by a high palisades. The ground then formed part of a wood, used as a site for amusement and other purposes, for shade, a home-stand, cattle-yard, &c. It is being fitted up all over with small tenements; permanent houses are also rapidly springing up near the entrance to the Exhibition; and already the Industrial Palace has become the nucleus of a framework village.

THE OCEAN TELEGRAPH IN FRANCE.

PARIS, Thursday, Sept. 16, 1858.

I have already called the attention of your readers to the very marked indifference with which the news of the great achievement of the current year has been received by the French press and people. This indifference may of course be referred in part to the secondary place which the United States occupy in the general relations of France, and in part to the prevalent ignorance of the French people, and even of the so-called "enlightened" classes of France, in regard to foreign nations generally. Things have not so absolutely changed in France in this particular since the days of Montesquieu as to blunt the edge of his satire upon the Parisians, who were dumb-foundered at the idea that any man could think of being a Persian; and the bulk of Frenchmen, outside those commercial classes which are brought into constant contact with our merchants at Havre, Bordeaux and Marseilles, really know and care very little more about the great Republic than they do about the Celestial Empire. In fact they probably are more interested just at this moment, in the recent triumph of the Anglo-Gallic arms over the Mandarins—though which will eventually secure military honor to the advantage of England then to their own, I think they live in the successful demonstration of the possibility of establishing an instantaneous communication between the Old World and the New, with all its vast results of good or ill to their own commerce, manufactures, and political affairs. The German journals have exhibited in this regard, as in so many others, a very favorable contrast with those of their military neighbors. In Bavaria, Baden, Saxony, Prussia—in fact throughout Western and Northern Germany—the world-wide consequences of the noble enterprise, so gallantly carried out by the Agamemnon and the Niagara, have been already pointed out in glowing language by the leading journals, and the Illustrirte Zeitung, of Leipsic, improved the occasion, a fortnight ago, to moralize that very distinct distance between the war-making, desolating, and transient "glories of Cherbourg," on the one hand, and the peaceful, humanizing, and enduring renown acquired by the Anglo-American telegraphic squadron on the other, upon which you have already commented with so much justice and force. To-day one of the Parisian journals "equibs" the demonstration of the 12 of September, as a worthy pendant to the "Jenny Lind fever," the "Kossuth mania," and the other "evanescent Barnumizing enthusiasms of the facile American character." Jealousy of the progress of England in the mighty field of practical science has perhaps played its part in producing the result, which is made the more remarkable by the fact that the first serious article devoted by the Parisian Press to the subject, is to be found in the Courrier de Paris of this morning, under the head of "Chronique Scientifique," and is occupied with discussing the causes of the "failure" of the telegraphic communications. This, certainly, appears to be, if it was not intended to be, a rather ungenerous way of dealing with the theme, and will hardly tend to enhance the popularity of France on our side of the water. Nevertheless this particular article is well and gravely written, and, under the venerable maxim of "Fas est et ab hoste doceri," may be worthy attention. The Courrier de Paris, as you know, is one of the oldest of the Parisian journals, and although newly established, (being now in only its second year,) has already acquired as much influence as any journal can be expected to wield under the present "system of repression." The article is signed by Dr. Rambuteau, and condenses the results of a conversation at the "Club of the Scientific Press," on the subject of the Atlantic Telegraph, with a letter from Dr. Favrot, one of the first scientific authorities of the Empire in this particular department. The chief place in the conversation thus reported was occupied by M. Becquerel, who is one of the most voluble, but at the same time also one of the most accomplished of savans. It will surprise nobody to learn that this illustrious gentleman claimed the intercontinental and all other telegraphs as a purely "French" invention, and referred the original idea of electrical communications to M. Ampère's edition of Thomson's (Conal Ryerson's) Chemistry, published in 1822. At that time, naturally enough, M. Barreswil was the "fellow-laborer of M. Ampère," and thus "was present at the birth of the Telegraphic Cable." He has, also, since "never ceased to follow up its progress, which has been considerable!" This is so unquestionably true that we may afford to allow it to be said, and if it rendered us somewhat of the celebrated gentleman whose inability to speak German was balanced by his relationship with an individual who played admirably upon the German flute, that is not our affair, but Mr. Barnum's. He has had at least as much share in the construction of the Intercoeanic Cable as many Kings have had in the completion of the great works whose progress they were graciously pleased to "follow up" with their royal attention. List, however, pass. It is neither more nor less absurd than some of our own domestic pretensions of provincial amour propre. The Debts has been said. That is one great point. And being said, it has ceased to work satisfactorily. The other and very important point. And M. Barnum has something as well as M. Favrot, to say upon that head, which deserves to be listened to—for the French are, beyond all question, among the foremost in the field of criticism and suggestion, and development, even if they lag behind the Anglo-American in the departments of invention and application. The only submarine cable which has ever worked successfully during a considerable time, was that laid down from Varna to Sulakleve, during the Crimean War, over a length of about 300 miles. This cable, after, however, finally succumbed to the influences which appear to be now at war with our Transatlantic line. What are these influences? This is the inquiry which, as the French academician, is now really to be commenced in earnest. "The Anglo-Americans have achieved a marvellous result in submerging so successfully the vast line which they have laid, but in regard to the transmission of signals, the most complete incoherence and irregularity are really the only consequence yet attained," says Dr. Rambuteau. Moreover, "given great regularity, they have not solved the problem of available transmission. The message of the Queen, containing one hundred words, occupied thirty hours in passing over the line—twenty of which were spent in the actual transmission. At this rate, many speeches uttered in the British Parliament, would occupy two or three months in crossing the Atlantic." How are these difficulties to be overcome? M. Barreswil attributes them, in part, to the disorganization of the metallic wires, and recommends the substitution of a small rope plated with copper, gold or silver, after a patent recently taken out by a certain M. Petit, in the place of the metallic conductors, which so soon become as brittle as glass. He suggests, also, as has been already often suggested, that the sea-soundings have been very imperfectly taken, and imagines that, at certain distances in the ocean, high banks may be found, which will admit of the construction upon them of "artificial islands," to serve as telegraphic stations. This, I believe, is a novel notion, but who shall say, in these days, what is or is not practicable. The most practical, however, of the comments furnished by the article which I am considering, are derived from the letter of M. Favrot—who writes, as I am happy to say, with less of pique and more of good feeling than his associates.

M. Favrot then treats of the disasters of the cable: "The experiments of M. Th. Duveyrier, which are of the first practical importance, demonstrate that the imperfect contact of the isolating body with the electrical conducting wires often retards the progress of the fluid even in these limits, much more narrow than those of the Atlantic Cable. Now in the Intercoeanic Cable the gutta-percha coating adheres immediately to the bundle of wires, and this offers an obstacle to the fluid which has chosen to well known, all along the surface of the wires, and being thus obstructed by the gutta-percha, it causes to find a new channel. This it makes for itself, either, first, by penetrating the body of the wires which it thus disentangles, or, second, by filtrating through the gutta-percha itself, which has become a partial conductor in consequence of the salt water forced into it under the enormous pressure of the superincumbent sea. It seems to me not improbable that both these effects have been produced. In the first case, the wires would be broken up. In the second, the fluid would pass to the external metallic covering, and so off into the water of the ocean. I should suggest as a remedy the interposition between the gutta-percha and the conductor of a layer of charcoal, or some other body which is at once porous and a secondary conductor of the fluid." Of course I give these remarks for what they are worth, and those who are competent in the cause will be the best judges of their value. We cannot, at least, afford to disregard any suggestions which may tend to perfecting the great work we have so well begun. And now that we have fitted everybody conceited, more or less nearly, and expatiated upon the sentimental interests of this wonderful achievement, it is time to apply ourselves in earnest in bringing about the results for which it was undertaken.

Mr. Morse, who is now in Paris, is far from despairing of a thorough victory over all the obstacles which are now disheartening those who but a fortnight ago were exulting as ignorantly and as honestly, too, as they now [illegible]

[illegible] tion of all things, [illegible] and time cannot now [illegible] we are unwilling to allow to the race of Mr. Gliddon.

Perhaps, after all, (for nothing is so fantastic as electricity,) the wires may have fallen to work again before this letter reaches you, and so have apparently shattered the wisdom of Paris. But only apparently. For the one Intercoeanic cable, is but the precursor of many more, and we can never rest till we have obtained some more and precise results by sea as we have already reached by land. Our present disappointment must not be lost to us. It should teach us more moderation in our harangues and self-praisings, and a greater patience in passing through the woods.

Whatever Paris may think of us we certainly think not a little of Paris. The city is just filling up with its denizens, (the Emperor being still at Biarritz, where he was to receive last night M. de Balcoya, dispatched to China with the text of the treaty, by Baron Gros,) and the Americans are thronging in from all parts of the continent. In the course of a single hour and a half, yesterday, I stumbled upon nearly thirty fellow countrymen and countrywomen. Still their numbers are less formidable than usual, and this vast Hotel du Louvre is nearly as full of English as of American visitors, a thing rare at this season of the year.

Origin of the Atlantic Telegraph.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Times.

SIR: A card has appeared in many newspapers in relation to the origin of the Atlantic Telegraph, signed by Messrs. Peter Cooper, Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts, Cyrus W. Field and David Dudley Field. The card declares the following viz.:

"This scheme (the Atlantic Telegraph) originated with the two gentlemen whose names are last subscribed to this card, Messrs. Cyrus W. Field and David Dudley Field, and by the former of them was communicated to the remaining associates.

If any other person will declare under his own signature that he suggested the scheme to any of us, mentioning the time, place and persons present, we will not only oppose him with our own personal contradiction; but shall probably have the means of meeting his statement with other evidence. . . . . There were six of us originally associated for the formation of the New-York, Newfoundland, and London Telegraph Company. One, Mr. White, is dead. This card is signed by the remaining five."

If any one contradicts these statements, the gentlemen are ready to oppose that person! Some of them admit that they got their ideas on the Atlantic Telegraph from Mr. Burns, yet they are ready to contradict any one who may dare to say that he gave the idea to Mr. Field! It is to be hoped that no one will be coward enough as to allow such threats to intimidate him in the promulgation of the truth.

I claim to have given Mr. Cyrus W. Field the first idea of an Atlantic Telegraph. I know nothing to sustain the pretensions of Mr. David Dudley Field.

Mr. Cyrus W. Field, 1854, was a paper and rag dealer in New-York, and he has ever boasted of a strict adherence to his regular pursuits. Before this time he knew nothing of telegraphing.

In 1844, during the construction of the first line in America, I was in Baltimore, and at that time I began my study of the electric telegraph. In 1847 and 1848, I was an associate builder of the Ohio and New-Orleans line. In 1850, I completed the St. Louis and New-Orleans line, and served as its President until in 1853. I resigned, to reside in the East, having in view the Atlantic Telegraph. There was no part of the business, but what I had made myself distinguished for proficiency in, except manipulation. The difficulties encountered by me in crossing the Ohio, Mississippi and other rivers were well known in the West. It was not until 1853, that we succeeded in inventing a cable that would stand the current of these turbulent streams. These experiments gave me the idea of a practicable ocean telegraph. At this state of success, many of the Western papers teemed with commendation. It was at this time, that I abandoned about the largest telegraph interest then owned by any one person in America, except the patentees, to assume new responsibilities in the East, and to further an ocean telegraph.

In October, 1853, the National Telegraph Review, edited by Mr. James D. Reid, a General Telegraph Superintendent, published an article noticing my connection with an Atlantic Telegraph. The Editor had no confidence in the success of the enterprise, and ridiculed the idea.

In November, 1853, I issued No. 1, vol. 1, of the Telegraph Companion, in which I reviewed the editorial of Mr. Reid, and contended that it was practicable to lay an ocean cable. In the same number will be found an article on the "Geography of the Atlantic Ocean—The Winds and the Currents—Tides and the Seas—Depth of the Ocean—Ocean Telegraph Practicable." The article stated that "the soundings reported in the preceding table establishes beyond doubt the practicability of laying a submarine electric cable on the bottom of the ocean."

It is useless to republish my writings at that time on the subject. They can be found in my published works. At that time an Atlantic Telegraph was my constant thought. My writings upon the subject were scattered, at my own expense, broadcast over both continents, and amongst the distributors subsequently was Mr. Cyrus W. Field.

In January and February, 1854, I was at Washington City, and was often engaged at the Observatory, collecting information as to the ocean telegraph. Much aid was given me by Lieut. Maury. February 22, 1854, he issued his letter to the Secretary of the Navy in relation to the telegraph plateau. While at Washington, thus engaged, I was offered $12,000 per annum as a salary, to revive and manage the then suspended Newfoundland telegraph. I accepted of the offer, believing that I could make it serve as an auxiliary for an ocean line. In February I visited New-York to revive the old Company, and it was then that I became acquainted with Mr. Cyrus W. Field, who had been invited to join the new arrangement. According to his appointment, I met him at his residence. That interview was to determine whether or not he would join the enterprise. Well do I remember that night. I described the prospects of the Newfoundland line in glowing words, proving conclusively that the stock would pay, and besides we would make a large sum on the building of the line. The plan was to get the steamers to call off Cape Race, and in time a branch line would be laid. All my plans, views, hopes, and prospects on the Newfoundland and Ocean lines were freely communicated to him, and he wrote many of them down in his memorandum-book, so that he could use them in his argument to induce Mr. Peter Cooper and others to join the enterprise. He was particularly anxious for Mr. Cooper, as he said others would follow his name without even an examination. The idea was to have ten members at $10,000 each.

In February, Mr. Field was anxious to have my views or instructions, in full, so that he might know exactly how to act. I did not fail to give him instructions on everything in detail. His total ignorance in the telegraph rendered it necessary for me to explain to him the simplest affair in the business.

While in New-York I had daily interviews with Mr. Field. He had some difficulty in getting some gentlemen to believe the second-handed statements from me, and to aid him, and at his request, I gave him an endorsing letter, saying that in my opinion the New-Foundland line would be profitable.

In order to further satisfy the gentlemen, that the Newfoundland line would pay on its stock, I agreed to make business contracts with the different lines throughout the country, largely favoring the Newfoundland line. At his request I gave him my autograph letter, so that he could show it to Mr. Peter Cooper and other gentlemen.

Mr. Field would not go into the enterprise unless I would agree to take the whole management of the Company, and as a compensation I was to receive $10,000 per year, being $2,000 less than I had previously engaged to do the same service. We agreed to that sum. I was one or the ten in the new arrangement, and my notes for $10,000 were the first given for the enterprise.

All matters seemed to be favorable, and I went to Washington, leaving Mr. Field to finish up a few immaterial points, expecting to remove immediately to New-York. I was hindered by sickness for some weeks. In the meantime the new charter was obtained and the names of Professor Moses and myself were left out.

Recovering from my sickness, I presented myself to Mr. Field, and announced my readiness to take charge of the general management of the Company's affairs. He informed me that they had concluded not to have salaried officers, and that I must not charge for my services. I referred him to our contract, and he answered, that the corporation was not bound by any promises made before its legal organization. These affairs transpired in the Spring of 1854. In May of that year, I visited Europe to obtain the concessions from Denmark, Sweden, Norway, &c.

In 1855, Mr. Cyrus W. Field gave the following to my associate in London, viz.:

"LONDON, Feb. 22, 1855.

Received of John Watkins Brett, Esq., $10,000, which makes him equally interested with Messrs. Peter Cooper, Moses Taylor, Cyrus W. Field, Marshal O. Roberts, Chandler White, D. D. Field, S. F. B. Morse, and T. F. Shaffner, in their original subscription to the stock of the New-York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company."

In 1855, Mr. Cyrus W. Field wrote to my associate, Mr. Brett, in London, in substance as follows:

"I have no interest in the Trans-Atlantic Telegraph, if I had, I would be happy to make some suggestions. It is a great undertaking," &c.

It is useless to pile up proof upon this matter. That which I have already given and referred to cannot fail to satisfy the reader as to where Mr. Field got his ideas of an ocean telegraph.

Subsequent to the reorganization of the Newfoundland telegraph, with Mr. Field, I read the experiments of Professor Faraday, on the retardation of electric currents on submarine conductors, which first caused me to believe that the ocean line would have to run by way of Greenland to be capable of practicable telegraphic service.

When I visited Europe in 1854, I examined the working of underground lines, and the experiments confirmed my mind as to the impracticability of long submarine circuits, and on my return to America, I published as follows:

"I will not say that a galvanic or magneto-electric current can never be sent from Newfoundland to Ireland, but I do say that, with the present discoveries of science, I do not believe it practicable for telegraphic service."

I have seen nothing in the working of the recently laid telegraph to change this opinion.

In writing this statement I disclaim any pretensions to credit in getting up the British Atlantic Telegraph from Ireland to Newfoundland. I have no faith in its practicability for telegraphing, and I am not entitled to any credit in the enterprise; I look upon it as an adventure; others may glory in an imaginary success. It is suspended by a thread invisible to the view of man, and its future is known only to Him who can count the sands upon the ocean shore.

Very respectfully, TAL. F. SHAFFNER.

Planters' House, St. Louis, Sept. 29, 1858.

Reasons Why Atlantic Telegraphy is Not Impracticable.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Sept. 28, 1858.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In opposition to the learned remarks of "C. D. H.," in your issue of the 27th, it may be advanced that Ocean Telegraphy is not impracticable for the following reasons, viz.:

1. Water is one of the best mediums through which [illegible] "Freemen's bite experiment" says: At the [illegible] increased, the eels became better conductors, and "had the hand been thoroughly wet, the bold experimenter might, as he was content to do, have paid for his discovery with his life."

2. Atmospheric changes do not affect the temperature of the ocean at great depths; hence fish in Winter seek and can only be found in deep water. Swimmers and divers are well aware of the fact that in Winter, when the surface of a lake or river is thickly coated with ice, its deepest parts are comparatively warm. This fact is patent.

3. No difficulty is experienced in the transmission of the electric current through the wires overland, when they are frozen so hard that very slight concussion would destroy their "continuity;" consequently there can be no difficulty in its transmission through wires, which, from their position on the bed of the ocean, at an immense depth, can never freeze.

In regard to the big words, "expansibility" and "contractibility," used by your correspondent, I take leave to remark that a sapient writer not long since assigned as a "reason" for the difference in the length of Summer and Winter days, that "the heat in Summer expanded, and the cold in Winter contracted them." Verbum sap. DIX.

The Leak in the Cable.

The satisfaction I felt in hearing of the successful laying of the "Atlantic Telegraph" is only equaled by the deep interest you take in its entire, prompt and continued success.

As one of your daily readers, and as a compliment to some remarks in yesterday's issue, I, though a foreigner, take the liberty of sending you my late observations on the possibility, or rather the impossibility, of the satisfactory working of the present cable.

I am employed in the first jewelery shop in Newark, N. J. Several miles of the cable were cut and fixed up by the workmen of said shop. Many pieces passed through my hands, and one of them made me doubt of the possibility of any kind of success. It happened to be one cut at the very place where the wire is soldered. How many such places are there? I cannot say, not knowing the length of the different pieces of wire added together to form the 2,000 miles submerged; but sure it is, that if all the junctions are as poorly made as the one that passed through my hands, the continuity of the electric current is exposed to be, perhaps, several hundred times interrupted.

The adding is simply made with soft solder, which, comparatively to the weight and jerks it is exposed to, is about as strong as frozen water would be to stick together two pieces of wood. Besides, the seven wires are unskilfully cut off and soldered together at the same plane. So that were it not for a kind of brass ferrule surrounding for half an inch the joined parts, the current would already be altogether stopped. Hence, since the 23 of September, "only these weak manifestations." At least such is my fear. Although I might call it a conviction, I offer my remarks to the public, so that were a second cable made, that incredible mistake may hereafter be avoided.

Yours truly, A FRENCHMAN.

What the Cable Rests Upon.

I cannot agree with Professor Maury that there is a plateau in the Northern Atlantic Ocean. Admitting, however, the fact, and that the bottom of the ocean is composed of "mites of little shells," as shown by the microscopic investigations "of that charming scientific man, Professor Bailey," we shall find that the plateau has no firmness; and that, though there are no currents, and these little shells "lie in cold obstruction," a cannon ball, an iron cable, or anything specifically heavier than the shells, has a constantly descending motion amongst these motionless little shells, which are floated by the water filling their interstices. Now, the Atlantic Cable, lying along the plateau, is gradually sinking into the mass, and will continue to sink—unless previously broken by its own immense weight—until it assumes the catenarian curve, the curve of greatest tension of a chain or cord suspended between two points. This tension has not yet, probably, taken place. But a very great tenuity of the copper wire has resulted from the stretching of the twisted iron wire; and, finally, the Cable must part—unless, happily, it finds something more solid to rest upon than the mites of little shells.

Dr Smith says the Cable has not parted. We suppose not; but, as the tenuity increases, the power of the electric current is abated. 1,800 miles of the Cable weigh, at least, 6,000 tons, and the gradual subsidence of this enormous weight amongst the little shells, on a line of 1,800 miles, has produced great ecility, and will, finally, be the cause of rupture.

ARISTOPHANES.

Springfield, Mass., Friday, Sept. 12, 1858.

P. S.—It is stated, in the English papers, I think, that communications through the Cable are more distinct and frequent going East than they are going West. If this be true, may not the cause be found in the magnetic variation, which is Eastwardly?

Up-River Politics.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

TROY, Thursday, Sept. 30, 1858.

The movement having in view a change in the Republican and American programme, on the State Tickets, referred to in the Times a few days since, has a real foundation, but the prospects of its success are regarded as not over-flattering. If I am correctly informed, it originated with the American friends of Wm. A. Russell, (present Prison Inspector,) in the northern portion of the State, who are desirous of keeping him in his place. Some of these gentlemen were willing at Syracuse to accept the proposition of the Republican Convention to give them the Commissioner and Inspector; but the storm which the proposition created with the mass of their fellows prevented such acceptance from being urged. Republicans here deride the idea that Mr. Morgan can be withdrawn in favor of Mr. Burrows, and Americans are equally disposed to scout the proposition which gives them a Lieutenant-Governor and one of the lesser remaining officers. Yet it is well understood that the meeting of the American State Committee at Albany on Friday, Sept. 1, has reference to some "arrangement." Judging, however, from present indications, the prospect of undoing what has been done is poor indeed. "It is too late!"

In this county, the probability is the Americans and Republicans will support a union ticket for county officers. Mr. Otis, the present (Republican) representative, will be nominated for Congress with entire unanimity. The Americans will take the Sheriff and a fair proportion of the other officers. If the union is cordially and honestly supported—and the indications all promise well, the Democrats must be defeated in the county on all but their State ticket. For the latter they are tolerably certain of a majority from 700 to 1,000. The vote on the American and Republican State tickets will not vary largely either way. As between the two parties, the Americans carried the county last Fall.

The Democrats have several candidates for Congress. It is understood the Hon. David L. Seymour, who has not been without aspirations for the Governorship, and who had some votes at Syracuse for that distinction, would not object to a nomination. His law-partner, the Hon. Geo. Van Santvoord, an able and rising man with us, has also been named, not as standing in Mr. S.'s way, but still, like Barkis, willin'. Alanson Cook—who twenty years ago printed the Troy Budget, and who made a snug fortune out of the State Printing when a Democratic Legislature took the printing from Crosswell and gave it to Carroll & Cook, of Troy—is also named. He was the "Hard" candidate for Congress four years ago. Cook is a man of good sense, as one fact in his life proves. When he had made his money, he abandoned types and politics and bought himself a snug farm, on which he has "increased his store" and lengthened his years.

If there is anything but talk in the rumored "Hard and Soft" difficulties over the result of their Convention at Syracuse, there is nothing in this section to indicate it. Here here are neither "Hards" nor "Softs." All of that party seem to be under one banner, with an eye single to the spoils.

In Albany County, as I learn from the best authority, the prospects of "union" between the Americans and Republicans are decidedly dubious. At a meeting of the American Central Committee on Tuesday evening, a resolution was offered, and carried by one majority, advising that no union be made with the Republicans on any terms. If this is adhered to, Mr. Cromwell's reelection to Congress is tolerably certain.

But there is a troublesome element in both this and Albany counties, which may upset all the well-laid plans of all three parties respecting local tickets. Indeed, I believe it extends to Delaware, Columbia and Sullivan counties. It is Anti-Rent, like Monsieur Tonson, "come again." In the Southern Assembly District of this county, the Anti-Renters have nominated their powerful attorney and advocate, Amasa Dingman, for the Assembly, and the account from that quarter is, that there will be no nomination against him. It is an Anti-Rent District through and through. To-day appears a call for a mass meeting of the Anti-Renters of this county, for the purpose of nominating an entire county ticket. In Albany County, John J. Slingerland wants the nomination of the Anti-Renters for Congress, and will probably get it.

The Anti-Renters have wisely abandoned "paint and calico," for the courts and the ballot-box. Whatever we may think of them or their cause, we must give them credit for improvement, and congratulate them on their returning good sense. If their present movement is persisted in, and neither of the existing parties manage to take undue advantage of it, we may well look for a considerable amount of damaged political crockery throughout "the infected district," early in November. Members in the same political party will be in the condition of the laborers in the field: "one taken and the other left." X.

A correspondent in Luzerne County, Penn., sends us as a "specimen" the claw of an immense bear which was killed in the woods in that region a few days since, by Mr. Frank Heisler, of Frenchtown. The ball hit the beast's eye and did the business for him, while the dogs overhauled a young cub, and settled its affairs.

[illegible] AND [illegible] INTELLIGENCE.

Important from the Interior.

Our dates from El Paso are extend to Aug. 16. The Chamberos were still in [illegible] but no news in questions of merely local importance.

Two new projects of railroads, in the province of Bahia, had been brought forward. They will be built, it is thought, under a guarantee of a remunerative dividend, by the Provincial Legislature.

The sales of coffee, on the 12th, for export, were 16,000 bags.

We have also advices from the Argentine Confederation to July 24, from Buenos Ayres to July 30, and from Montevideo to Aug. 3.

The bill establishing a tariff of differential duties had passed the Senate of the Confederation, and had become a law. Its operation was regarded at Buenos Ayres with gloom and apprehension.

The correspondent of a morning paper writes, however, in a tone not entirely despondent:

"This duty," he says, "will certainly at first somewhat injure the commercial interests of this city. But, on the other hand, the province of Buenos Ayres contains about 400,000 inhabitants—all the other provinces together about 800,000; the city of Buenos Ayres alone contains about 130,000 inhabitants, all good consumers—thus you see here a great market still remains for the manufactured goods of England, the silks, toilet articles and gew-gaws of France, as well as for the solids and necessaries which come from the United States, such as flour, lumber, &c. Besides, this port is the grand receptacle for the food, lumber, raiment, &c., to be furnished to the 300,000 souls in the province, but without or outside of the limits of this city. So much for the consumers. But I fear my defence (if you think I defend this province) will be somewhat feeble when I speak of its producers. However, it may be justly stated that its produce in hides, wool, hair, bones, grease, &c., amount to about one-third in value of all the rest of the provinces put together. Thus, you see the (at present) confederated provinces are one-third of the aggregate value of all products ahead of us. Now I will tell you how we make up for that one-third. In the first place, this port has so long been established that in Summer excellent roads from each and every province of the Confederation facilitate the transportation of products of all kinds to this city; secondly, this port has been within five years so improved that, notwithstanding its natural disadvantages, it is to-day the second best port in all South America, if we count Rio Janeiro the best and safest."

Furthermore, many of the wealthiest capitalists of the country, as well as foreigners, are established and reside here with their families, and they surely will use all their influence, moral and argumentative, as well as 'material and financial,' for the advancement of this port; and last, but by no means least, our present Government is so firmly established—it is, indeed, so truly a Government of the people and of the majority—that this province must, in spite of all obstacles, continue to advance with the same unprecedented rapidity which has marked its progress for the past five years. But this late law of duties did not pass the late session of the Congress of the confederated provinces without strong opposition. Several aged Senators—nervous from long years of service in the field as well as the Senate of their country—voted against the imposing of such duties, among whom prominently appeared Mr. Gutierrez, Senator from the province of Tucuman. You hear some persons grumbling in this city about the dullness of business here, and yet I see fine brick three-story houses being erected on all sides, club rooms, concert and ball rooms and other edifices, which demonstrate a sufficiency of cash, and cause much demand for United States lumber, carriages, pianos, &c., &c."

The Federal Congress had also adopted a bill subsidizing, to the amount of $54,000 a year, the following projected lines of steamers:

1. From Buenos Ayres to Parana, bi-monthly, stopping at Rosario.
2. From Montevideo to Parana, bi-monthly, stopping at Rosario.
3. From Rosario to Concordia, calling at the intermediate ports of the Uruguay.
4. From Rosario to Corrientes, bi-monthly, calling at intermediate ports.
5. From Parana to Santa Fé, daily.

The fluvial treaty between the Confederation and Brazil had been ratified.

The boundary treaty between the same parties was under discussion, with a fair prospect of ratification.

Mr. Christie, the English resident at Parana, had returned from Paraguay, without effecting the object of his mission. He found Lopez impracticable.

There is nothing of interest from Buenos Ayres.

From the Oriental Republic come rumors of political disturbances. The excesses heretofore reported in the Province of Mina, though ascribed to robbers, are supposed to be of a political character. Business was consequently much unsettled.

The Youthful Mail Robber.

We have letters from Mr. Rockwood, and an extra from the Indianola Courier, announcing the arrest of the robber of the San Antonio mails, and the recovery of a large amount of drafts, &c. The Courier says:

"Through the indefatigable efforts of Col. John T. Rockwood, local agent at Galveston, Jacob Darnell, a boy about fifteen years of age, and late an employe in the post-office at San Antonio, was arrested here to-day (13th) by Marshal Coffee, with fifty or sixty thousand dollars in drafts, bank stock, lottery-tickets, &c., of which the subjoined is a list:

The prisoner was placed in charge of Mr. James Gross, specially deputized in San Antonio to make his arrest, who will return in charge with him to-morrow."

Mr. Rockwood writes that the thief left San Antonio one stage ahead (twenty-four hours) of him. He (Rockwood) hurried up the drivers on the line, and when he got within thirty miles of Powderhorn, he left the stage and took to horseback, to get there before the steamship left. He found the youth in his room, at a boarding house, with about $4 worth of stamps, and a basin of water wetting them, to get them apart. Rockwood is now on his way back to San Antonio with the robber.

The Indianola Courier, of the 18th, referring to the arrest of the boy, says:

"A more simple, unsophisticated creature we have rarely ever seen. He is a German, whose parents live in San Antonio, and not possessing even the rudiments of an English education, and why the Postmaster at San Antonio should have ever employed him at that department, we can't conceive. He was frequently interrogated as to why and how he had abstracted the drafts, &c., to which interrogatories he always responded without hesitation. He said that it was his intention to go back to his uncle in Germany, and not use the drafts in this country, believing they would be converted into money there without any sort of difficulty. He was handed a sealed letter by one of our citizens, and asked to show how he opened letters without mutilating them. He took out his knife and in a moment's time opened it with the greatest dexterity, not mutilating it in the slightest. He was frequently asked if he had not accomplices. He stated most positively that no human being except himself knew anything of his peculations.

Mohammed Pacha, the Turkish Admiral.—The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun writes as follows:

"By private advices from Constantinople, of the 20th ult., we learn that Mohammed Pacha, who was sent on a mission to this country last Winter to examine our public and private dock-yards with a view to the construction of a screw line of battle ship for the Sultan, had returned and made his report. He expresses himself in the warmest and most grateful terms of the Government and people of the United States. He seems to have been delighted with his treatment here. Of the Navy Department, of Mr. Toucey, and the assistant of the Secretary, he speaks in terms of warm praise. As to the disappointment about the vessel, none is expressed.

The Capudan Pacha (just now removed) has requested the Porte to write a particular letter of thanks to the American Government for all its kindness to Mohammed Pacha, and the others of assistance which it made to him, respecting the object of his mission. Neither before his departure nor since his return have they expressed the expectation that the American Government was to have made a contract for a seventy-four for the Sultan. The Turkish Government is in extreme poverty, and cannot pay its way. The Capudan Pacha has been removed, and so have all the Sultan's sons-in-law. Economy is the order of the day.

NEPTUNE'S DEFEAT, OR, THE
SEIZURE OF THE SEAS;
A TALE OF BLOOD AND BILLS.
Produced with that careful attention to the minutiæ of the mise en scene, splendid sophic illusion, mistiness and chiaro-oscuro, which characterize all the efforts of all the managers in this enlightened and progressive age.
The Music, which is of an organic character, and familiar overmuch to the dwellers in quiet streets, turned accordingly from its original purpose to the most diverting manner, by Mr. John Cooke. The superhuman auxiliaries under the supervision of Mr. Coburn.
The Sea Scenery, which will consist of a series of highly imaginative marine views in water-color, it is confidently anticipated, will exhibit in a proper light the transparent designs of Messrs. Isherwood and Wallace.
The Costumes, mainly selected with reference to their fitness, and in strict accordance with the apocryphal period, illustrated by Mr. Flannery and a host of intelligent sewing machines.
The Properties, personal and putative, all and singular, devised, made and provided according to the requirements of the act, by Mr. Timmany.
The Mechanical Effects—Independent platforms, wire-pulling apparatus, and other submerged subsidiary appliances, by Mr. Bishop.
DISTRIBUTION.

July, the sunniest daughter of the year.....Miss Ernestine Henrarde
(First appearance.)
THE TERNEL.
Neptune, worried down into his subcellar by the constant turmoil on his surface, thinks himself sufficiently out of the way of mortal interference, and passes the word for enjoyment, having induced Old Time to stay and join in the fun. In the midst of their fancied security, they are startled by the appearance of a runaway Morse, and the daring rider Electros, who wishes to carry a line from Albion to Columbia, being anxious to effect their union; whereupon Neptune storms at this interference with his kingdom, and also observing a slight flirtation between the young Spark and Amphitrite, orders Boreas into masterly activity, who succeeds in blowing the whole party out of the water.
Foiled in his first attempt, Electros, disguised as a Yankee clock-peddler, seeks counsel of Time, who promises to aid his endeavor by sending his daughter July, whose mild influence subdues the violence of Neptune and the boisterous winds. The desirable union is effected. Immortal science triumphs. His submarine Majesty abdicates, and hands over the sovereignty of the seas to Columbia and Albion.
Amongst the scenery and incidental inducements will be found:
ACT I.
Submarine Grotto in the Deep, Deep Sea.....Isherwood
Glamorous chorus of jolly sea dogs:
"Oh! did you ne'er hear of the jolly old watchman?"
Royal entrance and admonitory song by Neptune:
"Look out, look out, we give you warning."
Time pays a passing visit, and is induced to remain.
Cantata Italian, Neptune.
Legendo Lascivio.
Startling appearance of the flying Morse.
Addressed to Time: "Oh! fly with me, my mother."
Unexpected arrival of Electros who indulges in "positively shocking conduct."
Comic song and dance, fire song:
"I'm a brisk and bright young fellow."
Return of Queen Amphitrite from Newport.
Neptune calls upon Time to witness his intended demonstration essentially checked by Electros.
Ridiculous position of the assailers.
Her Majesty's Consul Bounotis—Wallace.
Interesting conversation between Amphitrite and Electros; his plan for the union of Columbia and Albion favorably received by the Queen; the signal heard from the Nymphs and Amphitrites.
Vaudeville—Electros—"It's the mild and melodious steam whistle I hear."
The Plateau at the Bottom of the Sea—Isherwood.
Chorus of agitated water spirits—"What in thunder is the muss?"
Neptune floored by the deep sea lead, he intercepts a line from the pictures, and lays his plans to foil them.
Dangers of Albion and Columbia.
In two diving bells; the union all but effected; sudden and tempestuous interference of Neptune and Boreas; stormy finale.
ACT II.
The Wessenger of Quarter—Wallace.
Time, regulating his works, soliloquizes upon the rapid tendency of the age; he is visited by Electros.
Timely appearance of July attended by her happy hours.
Descriptive ballet of action and chorus.
"Come, joyous hours, with song and dance."
Characteristic dance by July.
Neptune's subjugation determined.
Another maritime station.
The King of the Sea, troubled in his mind, takes occasion to give his wife a piece of it—She retaliates—A disturbing element—Audacious reappearance of Electros, accompanied by Time and July—Sanguinary resolution of the Monarch—The sea-pays to be crushed out—Song Neptune:
"Blow, blow, puff out and stretch your lungs," with familiar chorus.
Contention of the genial seasons and the boisterous influences. The Northern repulsed.
NEPTUNE DEFEATED,
leading to
The Placid Surface of the Sea.—Isherwood.
Grand allegoric tableau, emblematic of the friendly union of Albion and Columbia.
Lachrymatic sale by Neptune, and
TRIUMPHANT FINALE.
Lend let your voices
Sound over the sea,
Who but rejoices
In unity,
Thus then, for ever
Joined hand in hand
May Columbia and Albion be united.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Two steamers are now due with European advices to the 22d of September—the Arago, at this port, and the Nova Scotian, at Quebec. The latter had not passed the Rivière du Loup Station at 7 o'clock, last evening, and the former had not been heard from up to the time of going to press.

Dr. BILLINGS arrived at New-Orleans on Monday, bringing dispatches from our Minister at Mexico, Mr. FORSYTH, to our Government. The principal object of his visit, however, is to purchase Minié rifles for the Liberal army, for which purpose he is well supplied with funds. He says the Americans are much thought of by the Liberal Party, and occupy high stations of trust. He is of the opinion that SONORA will soon be ceded to the United States for a consideration. On the 5th of September, a force was preparing to march on to Jalapa, ECHEGARAY'S head-quarters.

Our Utah correspondence to Sept. 4 is received. At Camp Floyd, preparations for the coming Winter were going on briskly; and arrangements were being made for housing the troops comfortably. The Overland Mail to the Pacific had been intercepted by the Indians, and a considerable body of dragoons had been dispatched by Gen. JOHNSTON to insure its safe transit for the future. The Indians were troublesome in various quarters. Nothing of special importance otherwise had occurred.

Later advices from Brazil and the Plata bring no intelligence of moment from the former. From the Argentine Union we have word of the passage of the tariff discriminating against Buenos Ayres—a measure of serious influence. It was expected to affect the commerce of that city injuriously. Several lines of steamboats had received a dotation from Government, which had likewise ratified a friendly treaty with Brazil. Mr. CHRISTIE, the English Resident, had returned from an abortive mission to President LOPEZ, of Paraguay.

We have advices from Havana to the 24th Sept. Several persons, said to be agents of SANTA ANNA, were passengers from St. Thomas to Vera Cruz upon the Solent mail steamer. Their mission was, of course, secret. The Sugar market remained quiet. The health of the city good.

Advices from Key West, via Charleston, are to the 26th of September. The bark Eglantine, of Thomaston, from New-Orleans for New-York, with 1,000 barrels of flour, ran on to Pickle Reef, on the 12th, by mistaking Caryaford for Gun-Key light. She was got off by being lightered, and arrived at Key West on the 16th, leaking badly. Her flour was discharged and put into store. The bark Cassilla, from Galveston for New-York, put in there on the 21st, with five of the crew sick.

The Canal Commissioners of this State have resolved to present a petition to the Governor, requesting him to call the attention of the Legislature, early in the coming session, to the necessity of excavating the Cayuga Marshes and of securing a channel seven feet deep throughout the line from Albany to Buffalo, in order to provide accommodations for the enlarged boats now building in large numbers, intended for steam propulsion as well as for use by horse-power.

A fugitive slave case occurred in New-London, Conn., on Friday. A coasting vessel arrived from North Carolina with a fugitive on board. The Captain, discovering the negro, went ashore at New-London and acquainted the Federal officials, who went to the vessel, but the man had taken alarm, jumped overboard and swam ashore. Collector TAYLOR instituted a search, found a Jew connected with a clothing store, and captured him; but Mr. MILLER interfered and ordered the negro to run, and he did. The Collector got out a handbill offering a reward of $50 for his arrest, but the man escaped, and is supposed to be on his way to Canada.

Capt. TOWNSEND, of the Slaver Echo, who has been undergoing examination at Boston for some time, has been fully committed for piracy. His trial will take place before the Circuit Court, on the 15th of October. A new complaint has been entered against him, for misdemeanor, which subjects him to a fine of from $1,000 to $5,000, and imprisonment for from three to seven years.

The corner-stone of the new lighthouse on Minot's Ledge, at Cohasset, Mass., was laid, on Saturday, with appropriate Masonic and other ceremonies. Addresses were made by the Hon. EDWARD EVERETT, LEWIS B. COMINS and others.

The running of the new Boundary Line between New-Hampshire and Maine has been completed. Part of the route lay through a dense forest, and the old line was found in many places indistinct, and in others entirely obliterated.

The Minnesota Indians have made an attack on a Pembina train, on its way from St. Paul northward. Three of the men in charge of the train were killed.

Thanksgiving in New-Hampshire is fixed for Thursday, Nov. 25. Massachusetts has usually set the example, but the Granite State does it this year.

The Newfoundland and Edgartown submarine cable is so defective that it is found necessary to have it taken up for repairs.

The Postmaster-General, notwithstanding the reports to the contrary, has not yet selected a site for the New-York Post-Office.

The Metropolitan Club, a Democratic organization of anti-Tammany proclivities, ratified the State nominations by a large meeting, held on Saturday night, in Stuyvesant Institute. Captain RYNDERS, being among the audience, was requested by some of the officers of the meeting to take a seat on the platform, to which he consented, and was escorted thither amid cheers and hisses—the latter predominating. In a subsequent attempt to make a speech, he was repeatedly interrupted and hissed, and it was only through the most earnest appeals of the Chairman that he finally procured a hearing.

ROGERS, the boy who killed JOHN SWARTWOUT, in South-Avenue, some months ago, while he was waylaying his family, was brought up in the Supreme Court, General Term, on Saturday, and ordered to be tried on the 12th of November next.

The inquest investigation at Staten Island was continued on Saturday before Judge MERCHANT. The witnesses examined on the part of the defence were Doctors WHITEHILL, LEE, HABGOOD, HARRISON, HOSES, and Mr. LOCKE, the United States Government Boarding officer. The testimony was mainly intended to show how the Quarantine establishment has been conducted heretofore. The attempt to bring in all manner of irrelevant subjects of a merely personal nature, by the counsel for the defence, has thus far prolonged the examination to a degree that has exhausted the patience of even the [illegible] Judge MERCHANT has been obliged to rule out a great deal of the testimony on this ground. The interest of the trial is decreasing from day to day, and only a small audience attends the examination.

A Conference of German Societies, from different parts of the United States, called by the Board of Directors of the German Benevolent Society of New-York for the purpose of considering and providing for the ills which German immigrants in this country are heir to, is now in session at Pythagoras Hall, in Canal-street. The Conference opened on Friday, and on Saturday had a lengthy meeting.

The Evening Schools, under the care of the Board of Education, are announced to open this evening. There are forty-three schools named, representing all parts of the City, of which twenty-three are for males and twenty for females. The list will be found in our business columns. The City Superintendent has offered to place these schools on the same basis with the day schools, so far as his department is concerned. Hitherto there has been no regular supervision of these schools, and their management has been in the hands of the Executive Committee of Evening Schools. This year the Board of Education should place the schools under such reliable and intelligent supervision as will insure their highest efficiency. None but the most thoroughly intelligent, conscientious and devoted teachers should be employed, and the course of study should be simplified and rendered more practical, while the methods of instruction and illustration should be sensible and real, in place of the memorizing and book-processes which are more useful to cover up the inefficiency of the teacher than to inform the pupil.

The October term of the General Sessions will commence this morning, before Recorder BARNARD. There are 105 prison cases, besides several bail cases awaiting trial. Of these, four are for murder, being the cases of MICHAEL MOLTYNEX for the murder of his wife; JOSEPH NICHOLS, for the murder of WILLIAM DARLING; CHARLES O'REILLY, for the murder of JOHN SAXTON, and JAMES LARKINS for the murder of DOWLING. There are 38 cases of Grand Larceny, fifteen of forgery, five of robbery in the first degree, eight of felonious assault and battery, (in which, if the accused are convicted, the Recorder, we may be assured, will not let them off with a convenient fine,) sixteen cases of burglary, three of arson, three of receiving stolen goods, besides many charges for minor offences. The Recorder evidently will be fully employed for the next three weeks.

There were 433 deaths in this City last week—eight less than occurred the week preceding. One fatal case of yellow fever is on the returns of the City Inspector. The disease was contracted in Savannah, where the deceased resided. He left that city on the 23d ult. sick with the fever, and died four days after. There were 13 deaths by violent causes.

A reform ticket for Trustees of the Cemetery of the Evergreens has been nominated by the citizens of Williamsburg, (lot owners,) and the election takes place to-day, between 11 A. M. and 1 o'clock P. M., at No. 1 Freeman's Buildings, City Hall.

The General Markets, on Saturday, closed vigorously for Cotton, heavily for Flour, Wheat and Corn; actively for Barley, and tamely for Groceries, Provisions, Naval Stores, and Hides. Freights were dull, with 774 vessels of all classes in port.

Politics of the Plata.

The bill, or project of a law, establishing a tariff of exports, discriminating to the disadvantage of Buenos Ayres and Montevideo, was pending, according to advices received a few days ago, in the Argentine Senate. Doubts were thrown upon its passage, as several leading conservatives were known to be antagonistic. Later information proves these doubts to have been baseless. The bill has passed the Senate, and is a law. Hereafter a great body of that foreign shipping which has found its cargo at the outlet of the Plata, will be tempted to seek its freight at Rosario, in the Argentine State of Córdova, where every preparation has been made for its accommodation. As urging the tide of commerce into waters to which the foreign trader has been a stranger, the event is one of peculiar significance.

It is mainly, however, as a political stroke, that the new tariff acquires importance. Since the secession, successively, of the Banda Oriental and Buenos Ayres from the confederacy, the Argentine States have contributed largely to the financial support of those Republics, at the cost of its own resources. Aside from a natural disinclination to aid in the maintenance of revolt and insubordination against its own authority, the federation could ill spare the lost income; as the loss, having to be supplied by taxation of its producers, operated as a double burden upon its material progress. It is an instance of amazing forbearance, therefore, that the present measure was not resorted to long ago. Its immediate effect will be to overcome the reluctance of Buenos Ayres to resume her former association with the interior States. It may also influence the Oriental State to consider the policy of re-union, especially as, in addition to the commercial view of the case, there is the fact of perpetual turbulence, disorder and military rigor, in their present condition, disturbing every field of industry, and interfering with the normal development of their resources—considerations pleading urgently for affiliation with the strong and progressive system of UNQUIZA.

If it be reasonable to anticipate these results, and to look forward to a reconstruction of the Confederated Republic of the Plata under such promising auspices as those now presented on the Paraná, the people of the United States will have good matter of self-felicitation. It is well known that the predilections of Gen. UNQUIZA, and of the Argentine people, are decided in favor of the North Americans. The Buenos Ayreans and Montevideans are, if anything, hostile,—contending British and Brazilian influences being in the ascendent. To regain a proper degree of weight in the politics of that region, we have only to wait upon the policy of UNQUIZA, which points steadily due north; and to encourage any strong combination against the advance of Brazil towards annexation or absorption. A great help to the latter aim will be the Paraguay demonstration, if it prove as successful as its preparation deserves. It is of the last importance to impress these people with a sense of our martial qualities. Indeed, the letters with which we accredit our legations to the Spanish American States, will never be worth the seal affixed to them, until certain rounds of ball-cartridge and flashes of musketry have prepared the popular mind. Our moral influence among these semi-barbarians must be raised upon the physical.

CANADIAN TAPIS OUTRAGED.—A Mr. G. G. NORRIS, of Toronto, has given immense umbrage to his fellow subjects of Canada West, by a display of officious loyalty. Feeling a deep interest in the success of an industrial Exhibition to be held this Fall in Toronto, he had the audacity to present a petition to the Queen, asking that Her Majesty would be pleased to honor the occasion with her royal presence, or if that should be deemed inconvenient, that she would authorize the youthful Prince of WALES to visit Canada in her stead. Mr. NORRIS, no doubt, considered that the sight of any member of the royal family would delight the souls of Her Majesty's lieges in the Province, and attract multitudinous visitors to the Fair. Accordingly, he yielded to an inward impulse which urged him to become the happy instrument of a result so auspicious, nothing doubting that he should thereby win the everlasting gratitude of all his fellow Canadians. Never was mortal man more mistaken. Instead of thanks, curses are showered upon his head. Not that he attempted to commit a crime. That is not pretended. But his sin consists in proceeding irregularly. There is an etiquette which governs all provincial applications to royalty. They must not be made directly. The Governor-General is the authorized medium through which they are to come. This Mr. NORRIS did not know, or did not regard. He procured signatures to his petition and carried it to London himself. It would seem that among the signers were scores of M. P. P.'s and other officials. Indeed, so well fortified was the document with influential names that the Colonial Secretary, Sir EDWARD BULWER LYTTON, consented to overlook the irregularity and lay the petition at the feet of the throne. As might have been expected the prayer was unsuccessful. The Queen would neither come to the Toronto exhibition herself nor send her boy.

But the affliction of this refusal was light compared with the storm which awaited poor Mr. NORRIS at home. The Press opens all its vials of wrath upon the hapless man. He is accused of making the Province ridiculous, and the people of Canada are called upon promptly to disavow him. Verily it is a dread and awful thing to approach the throne in a manner not authorized by custom and the laws of etiquette.

Who Mr. J. G. NORRIS is we are not informed. In fact, it is said that he is nobody. A letter of his "To the Mayor and Corporation of Toronto," is published by way of exposing the deficiency of his orthography; and, indeed, if the spelling of his petition was no better, we cannot blame Her Majesty for hesitating to subject the Prince of Wales in his school-boy days to the influence of Mr. NORRIS' company. That gentleman has received a lesson which he is likely to remember. His ambition was somewhat too lofty. But had success crowned his endeavor—if the Queen or even the Prince had consented to come over—we might have heard little of his bad spelling and less of his "impudence."

Fair of the American Institute.

If the Thirtieth Annual Fair of the American Institute fails to attract that liberal share of public attention which in former years it was its good fortune to command, the fact must be attributed to a rare and unique embarrassment of riches which at the moment has overtaken our goodly citizens, and rendered them insensible to the demands of monster pumpkins, steam pumps and other curious varieties of the ever-faithful Yankee nation. What with the cares of two opera companies, a regatta, a horse race, a lecture by Capt. DE RIVIERE, a peep at the comet and an inquiry into the wind and muscle of the Benicia Boy, we (speaking apologetically for the public) have had our hands full. Supposing, therefore, that in our wealth of opportunity we have overlooked the claims of the Fair, we can virtuously plead a multitude of sound and fair excuses. Let the dear, good public have the benefit of all possible apology for its shortcomings. Imitate, by all means, the excellent philosophy of the theatrical manager who can always give ten thousand reasons why the public don't go to his theatre without plaguing himself with the isolated fact that the public don't want to go.

When the rush comes—and we hope sincerely that come it will—there may be a little grumbling at the sparse character of the exhibition. Compared with former years, it is neither so large nor so interesting as we had a right to expect. This, in a measure, is attributable to the Crisis, and its crippling tendencies in mechanics and manufactures. A suspicion of the recuperative power of the nation has kept on the brakes much longer than was necessary—and hence, the large houses have not thought it politic to show their deftness, or exhibit specimens of their handicraft, for the simple reason that they anticipated no result therefrom. But by far the largest class of exhibitors in a fair of this description, is formed of the humblest artisans,—men who exercise their wits in elaborating those curious and useful inventions familiarly known as "notions." Thrown out of employment by the Panic, and harassed still further by the Bank suspensions, it is not remarkable that we find this class scantily represented. We are disposed to make every kind of allowance for an Institute which is unquestionably good in its effect on the inventive genius of the day, and to account for a thin exhibition by well-known and deplorable facts, if it be possible.

It seems to us, however, that in many other respects the Fair is no longer what it used to be. Every year it assumes more and more the character of a bazaar. The humble exhibitor, with his rudely-constructed model, is in danger of being, if he has not already been, squeezed from the stand, and the manufacturer of things that are not new assumes all the space possible for the gorgeous commercial display of his wares. Carpeted inclosures are becoming the fashion, and an amount of extravagance in the general display of goods which cannot fail to be disheartening to the majority of exhibitors. We are not sure that any exhibitor is justified in converting the Fair into a means of stupendous advertising, but most assuredly it has come to this. It is impossible to look at an object of interest without being waited upon by a "gentlemanly attendant," who lets you into the secret of prices, and where the article is to be had. In a word he "touts" for the concern, and does it vigorously. Exhibitors of a meaner sort do not hesitate to peddle their goods in the most approved and orthodox way. He is a fortunate man who escapes from the palace without having his coat-tails weighted with useless purchases, forced upon him by the importunities of endless Yankee traders. All this is wrong, and should be looked to by the managers. We would not for the world venture to assert that the public stays away for such reasons, but it may be relied upon that in the end a good many people will grow weary of paying twenty-five cents for the privilege of being dunned by all sorts of petty tradesmen.

POSITION OF EX-GOVERNOR HUNT.—We publish this morning a letter written by the Hon. WASHINGTON HUNT, in which he defines his relation to the several parties now in the field. His position, he says, remains unchanged. He is still a National Whig, and continues to cherish the conservative principles of that party. But in respect to the State tickets before the people, he shall cast his vote and influence for that of the Americans. The failure to unite the Americans and Republicans in this State, as they have united in other States, he regards as a misfortune, and thinks that under the circumstances the Americans had no alternative but to nominate a ticket. In their selection of candidates he believes they have been fortunate. And he will give "a cordial and earnest support to LORENZO BURROWS and his associate nominees."

Governor HUNT probably felt impelled to make a public statement of his position by the fact that Republican journals claimed him as a supporter of their ticket. This assumption he has put at rest by his letter. There has been misapprehension in regard to his relations to the American Party. He never belonged to that order or organization, and probably never voted its ticket either in whole or in part, but was one of a class of old Whigs, more respectable than numerous, though more numerous than is generally supposed, who, upon the breaking up of the party to which they had for a quarter of a century been identified, declined to connect themselves with either of the new organizations.

The meeting of the American State Committee at Albany, on Friday, took no steps toward a change of relations with the Republicans. The Americans do not now appear to covet union. Their leaning that way terminated with the rebuff they received at Syracuse, and they seem, from all indications, abundantly content to stand by themselves during the current campaign. They fight, not for office and spoils—these good gifts being beyond their reach—but for position and weight in the canvass. Evidently, therefore, those who have supposed them anxious for coalition begin to perceive their error.

On the other hand, the Republicans, judging from the tone of their organs, are suffering more or less anxiety. That there is an ungovernable spirit abroad which inclines their men to a greater or less extent to vote the American ticket, is no longer to be disguised. Under this state of things they are strenuously summoning "a full vote." Their trust is in the large Fremont majority of 1856. If the men who voted for the Pathfinder, or even the bulk of them, can be rallied to the polls, the leaders of that party are still confident of victory. But it is ever a word of doubt and contingency.

The Case of Rodgers.

The case of ROGERS has at last been disposed of, and after eight months' litigation, he has finally been sentenced to be executed on the 12th of November. All the means which the law offers to people in his condition for effecting their escape have been exhausted. The Court of Appeals has held his conviction to be legal, and the Governor has been already in vain solicited to grant him a pardon.

We have no desire to harrow the feelings either of the unfortunate youth or those of his family by commenting too severely on his fate. It is undoubtedly a very hard case that even a murderer should die a violent death at his age, and a still harder that two households should be plunged into mourning by the street-pranks of two or three young scamps. But, as we have over and over maintained, in commenting upon the numerous occurrences of a similar nature, which occur in New-York every year, there are other people to be considered besides the murderers and their friends. All the sympathy we have to spare is elicited, not by half-drunken rowdies parading the streets with deadly weapons by night, and in the morning trembling in garrets over the consequences of their crimes, but by the decent, industrious and honest people who are forced to dwell in the back streets and avenues, in which rowdies and assassins most do congregate, and who are in hourly terror of their violence. Those whose lot has been cast in the fashionable quarters of the town, into which "Dead Rabbits" rarely make their way, can probably afford to make light of the dangers of humbler people, and may not be so ready to perceive the necessity for punishing the more heinous forms of crime with the extreme penalty of the laws, as those who live in the midst of criminals; but it is no trifling matter for the workingmen and their wives, like the late Mr. SWANSTON and his. Our first and most sacred duty is to make the streets safe for the helpless, the unarmed, and the peaceable. Until this be done, mercy is out of place. The artisan who toils all day for an honest livelihood, and the wife who takes care of his house and family, have paramount claims upon our pity and protection. These people are not brought into the world by Providence to be stabbed and hacked for the amusement of any young blackguard who happens to take too much liquor. They surely have their rights in society.

We are rejoiced at the issue of the Rodgers trial, not because it brings the wretched young man to the scaffold, but because it establishes the doctrine, once for all, that youth and intoxication are not legal palliations of a wanton murder. Law and common sense are both strained enough in these days to shield culprits, but if these excuses had been allowed to have weight, the whole community would literally have been at the mercy of the worst class of the population; for nearly all our criminals are young men—in any other country they would be called boys—and nearly all are in the habit of drinking more or less every evening. Every young scamp will now know that if he chooses to arm himself, leave his parents' house and get tipsy, and in his drunken passion should chance to kill a peaceable man, he will be very likely to stand in due time where ROGERS now stands. It is terrible, no doubt, that such an example should be needed to prevent mere boys from drinking, and killing their neighbors; but we have had sorrowful experience that such is the case. Something of the sort seemed positively necessary, to convince parents, too, in the class of life to which ROGERS belonged, that they cannot suffer their children to break loose from control and roam the streets by night, and connect themselves with gangs of rowdies, with impunity. The law sleeps sometimes—only too often in New-York—but it sometimes wakes up with a vengeance.

There could not be a better opportunity than this of drawing attention to the fact that the existing uncertainty in the administration of justice is half chargeable with such a tragedy as that which we are to witness a month hence. Every time a criminal is set at liberty, by hair-splitting or chicane, or pardoned by a careless Governor, something is done towards creating a crisis, in which a striking example should be necessary. If punishment were generally sure, and offenders generally caught, it might not be necessary to hang such a youth as ROGERS. The unfortunate is stoning no less for his own crime than for the hundred crimes which legal tricksters, knavish politicians and corrupt judges, and a weak Executive have shielded from punishment. When scoundrels who command votes in their Wards, are allowed to shoot, maim and bruise with impunity, the simpletons who can possess neither votes nor influence are led to believe they may do likewise. Many are right in their inference, but at last the law loses patience and demands a sacrifice.

FUSION IN THE CITY.—Since the Americans and Republicans committed the capital mistake of not fusing on their State tickets, they have been endeavoring to atone for their blunder, as far as they can, by uniting on the local county tickets. The two committees meet this evening to take some steps towards a union, and as Barkis is willing on both sides there will probably be a satisfactory conference. The only difficulty appears to be the question of spoils, and how they shall be divided. It is pretty generally understood, we believe, that the Americans claim as a sine qua non, the nominee for Sheriff, and are willing to give up the County Clerk and all the rest; but whether the Republicans will yield this important office remains to be seen. The Sheriff's office is the rock on which the Democratic Party in this City is in danger of dashing itself to pieces, and if the opposition do not manage their affairs discreetly, they will most likely meet a similar fate.

THE NEW CITY POST-OFFICE.—It will be seen by the dispatch from our Special Correspondent at Washington that Postmaster-General BROWN has not decided, as has been stated, to purchase Appleton's Building for our City Post-Office. Mr. BROWN appears to have come to a positive determination in his own mind as to the proper site for a Post-Office, but he is deterred from acting on his convictions out of deference to what he imagines to be the wishes of the people of the City. The people most certainly have a right to be heard in the matter, and they will be heard, too, whenever a selection shall be made, if it do not meet their approbation. It would appear from the dispatch of our correspondent that the Postmaster-General is in favor of a piece of jobbery which was proposed some three years ago, in connection with that out-of-the-way location, Hudson-square. But with Willett's Point fresh in the memory of the President, we should imagine he would be very cautious in sanctioning the selection of a Post-Office site for New-York. If the Postmaster-General or the President is not sufficiently familiar with the business localities of this City, let them take a map of the City and see where the most convenient and central spot for the Post-Office would most likely be. We are very sure they would never think of fixing upon such an out-of-the-way part of the City as Hudson-square.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE JEWS.—It may be recollected that President BUCHANAN made use of the phrase "all the nations of Christendom," in his answer to Queen VICTORIA'S message transmitted by the Atlantic Telegraph. This expression gave offence to Dr. ISIDOR KALISCH, rabbi of the Ben Jeshurun Congregation in the city of Milwaukee, who wrote to the President demanding an explanation. It would seem that the worthy Israelitish teacher revolted at the assumption implied in the term "Christendom." Mr. BUCHANAN replied, disclaiming all intention "to cast any reflection upon the Jews." Such an idea, he says, never entered his mind. It is likely, indeed, that he may have supposed this to be a Christian country, and that "Christendom" was an allowable word as applied to the nations of Europe and America. Impressed with this idea it is scarcely to be wondered at that he should have regarded the Rev. ISIDOR KALISCH as being somewhat "hypercritical." It is a curious indication of progress and change that a member of the Jewish persuasion should arraign the President of the United States for such an offence.

RESIGNATION OF P. B. SWEENEY.—We regret to learn that P. B. SWEENEY, Esq., has placed his resignation of the office of District-Attorney in the hands of the Governor. Mr. SWEENEY went to Europe some months since, his medical advisers hoping that change of air and treatment might restore his health. But these anticipations were not realized; and having returned no better than he was at starting, he has taken the very proper course of again placing the office at the disposal of the people next November. Mr. SWEENEY carries with him into his temporary retirement from active life the esteem and good wishes of our most respectable citizens. We trust that rest and freedom from official care may help speedily to restore his strength, and give back to the Democratic Party one of its most vigorous and successful laborers. It is probable that Governor KING may appoint the present Assistant District-Attorney to fill Mr. SWEENEY'S place until next January.

City Items.

General-Superintendent TALLMADGE, whom the Police Commissioners, censuring him on the first count of the charge on which he has been tried, for not repairing immediately, in person, to the scene of the disturbance at Quarantine, but fully exonerating him on all the other counts—have reinstated, restored upon the active duties of his office immediately on the rendition of the decision of his Judges, on Friday.

The anniversary of the Local Preachers' Association of New-York and Brooklyn, was held yesterday at the Allen-street M. E. Church. In the morning they had a Love-Feast; in the afternoon, there was preaching, with the reading of reports and addresses by local preachers from various parts of the country, and in the evening, there were voluntary addresses from all—and there were many—who wanted to talk. It was a pleasant reunion, and a large one.

Arrangements have been made by the Market-street (Reformed Dutch) Church for a Sunday evening service in the great hall of the new Cooper Institute, Astor-place. Their pastor, the Rev. T. L. CUYLER, preached there in the evening only—and the immense hall will be thrown open free to our citizens and to strangers.

A meeting of exhibitors was held at the Crystal Palace on Saturday night, and a Committee appointed to make a report in favor of the Exhibition and its management, and to correct any erroneous impressions that might be imbibed from the newspapers, some of which were spoken of in no very complimentary terms.

District-Attorney SWEENEY has returned from Europe; but his health, as we understand, is not restored.

DEDICATION OF THE MORTUARY CHAPEL IN CALVARY CEMETERY.—The recently-finished Mortuary Chapel, in Calvary Cemetery, was dedicated on Sunday. The Most Reverend Archbishop HUGHES having been otherwise engaged, the Very Reverend Father STARRS, Vicar-General of the Arch-diocese, officiated, aided by the Rev. PATRICK HENNESSY, chaplain of the Cemetery, and another clergyman whom our reporter did not recognize. As soon as the ceremony of the dedication had been completed, the Rev. Mr. HENNESSY celebrated Mass. At the close of the first Gospel, the Very Reverend Mr. STARRS preached an appropriate sermon, his text having been taken from the third book of Kings, chapter 8, verse 28. In the course of his remarks, he stated that the building was dedicated as the Chapel of the Holy Rosary of Calvary Cemetery. The Chapel—which was well filled on the occasion—is a small, neat frame edifice, of the Gothic order.

Mulligan's Case—Mr. Sedgwick's Conduct Defended.

Your criticisms on the conduct of the Assistant District-Attorney, Mr. SEDGWICK, in reference to the Mulligan case, were based on a misapprehension of the case, though it is easy to see how you have been led into error by the absurd and ignorant question propounded by the City Judge. In criminal trials the counsel for the people have both the opening and close; but on all motions to a Court, the parties moving are entitled to the last word in favor of their application. Now, the trial of MULLIGAN for the assault on Captain WEBB terminated on his pleading guilty, and the subsequent matter in the case was a motion by the prisoner's counsel in mitigation of punishment. Under these circumstances Judge RUSSELL should have known better than to ask Mr. SEDGWICK what he had to say in reply to Mr. SICKLES; and Mr. SEDGWICK in stating that "the defence had the close," was merely correcting the Judge's error in the mildest and politest form possible. To accuse the Assistant District-Attorney of sympathy with the Mulligan charge is to ignore four years of active and zealous labor in the cause of public justice; and those who remember Mr. SEDGWICK'S speech in the case of Dennis CUNNINGHAM, (tried for the murder of "Fanchon,") will not be likely to believe that he was remiss, upon this or any other occasion, in the duty of exerting all his official power for the protection of the public peace. ORDER.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Oct. 2, 1858.

HOBOKEN WATER-WORKS.—The laying of the water-pipes is completed, with the exception of putting in a few connection-pipes. The contractor has notified the city authorities that the work will be finished on Tuesday, and ready for letting in the water, but intimated that, as there are some differences between himself and the authorities, they should be satisfactorily arranged before he makes a formal delivery to the city. An appropriation having been declined by the Council, the proposed celebration will fall through.

Personal.

A letter from the Hon. [illegible] dated at Alton, Sept. 27, says:

"My life is devoted to my [illegible] I could say that I was not still an invalid, but when attacked by the pain in my chest, I am comfortable, and enjoy my books, my walks, my repose and tranquility which I feel [illegible].

I begin the day with exercise, but [illegible] when thoroughly exhausted, am carried in [illegible] blanket and conveyed to my hotel on a litter on my [illegible]. After my walk I find myself obliged again to take my bed. I have been some days [illegible] treatment is in pleasant contrast with the [illegible] sufferings from fire which made my [illegible] treatment.

It is with a pang inexpressible that I find myself thus arrested in the labors of life, and in the duties of my position. This is harder to bear than the [illegible] do not hear of friends engaged in active service like Trumbull in Illinois—without a feeling of [illegible].

There is a row in the Post-Office at Rockaway Island. A Clerk, one Sir Brittany, [illegible] the sin of voting against the Government [illegible] election, and received his walking-papers in consequence thereof. But he refused to leave [illegible] head of the office has now been transferred [illegible] ing him and refusing to recognize the party appointed as his successor.

The Ex-Reverend Mr. HOYT, of Richmond, Va., must have attended the Free-Love convention in that quiet little town, for he has done [illegible] according to the Richmond Enquirer. The [illegible] Court of Vermont has just convicted a minister of the gospel of the [illegible] whereupon the Herald gives a [illegible] be gentlemen.

"We know that many [illegible] Saint Albans with a long face, [illegible] and Rev. preached to his [illegible] faith a few months, and [illegible] preached and went a [illegible] reached out temperance (and the [illegible] ished at his stated lectures and [illegible] got drunk. He lectured to young [illegible] the admirer. He kept a bad [illegible] paper—stole money, and charged the [illegible] servant girl—got the office of Deputy Inspector—got drunk upon smuggled liquor—took one [illegible] man's wife and a bundle of manuscript sermons, [illegible] ran away from his own wife, his paper, and a [illegible] of creditors."

A picture of WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, the virulent poet, is given by a correspondent of the [illegible] Traveller, who sends his sketch from the locality of "Owl's Head, Mompelgart Lake," and who says:

"A few minutes elapsed, and [illegible] ing knock at the door, and I entered. [illegible] LANDOR. He was a big, burly man, with a face which had a savage expression in it. Mr. [illegible] said of him, that it resembled a tiger with the small-pox. LANDOR'S was something like that. His hair was iron-gray, and under it was a hard, bold-looking forehead. No one observing him carefully would say—'That is an amiable man.' He looked fierce and haughty, and his looks did not belie LAVATER. It was curious to observe the contrast between LANDOR and SOUTHEY. One was all storm, the other all calm. SOUTHEY said little. LANDOR blustered. He was very uncomfortable and seemed to hate every one—except himself. The evening passed away pleasantly enough. LANDOR abused every one—BYRON especially. I well remember his speaking of NAPOLEON; and by the way, that reminds me of a poem by LANDOR published in the [illegible] in 1831, in which poem 'Shelley' makes a [illegible] onslaught on Louis Napoleon! I know he would not allow Napoleon to be enough French to mark the change. In 1856 Mr. LANDOR published a letter in the same paper, and coolly tells the public that he always believed the present Emperor of France to be the incarnation of all the virtues. Perhaps, as Mr. LANDOR has just gone to France to escape a well-deserved penalty, he may be received at the Tuileries, but will be take with him those lines in which he glorifies Gesmar and damns the President?"

CRAWFORD'S fine statue of JAMES GORE is finally placed on its pedestal in Mount Auburn Cemetery. The Boston Transcript describes it as graceful and majestic. The height is about seven feet. The costume is appropriate to the time in which his public services were called forth, nearly a century ago. A cloak is thrown over the shoulders, exposing the left arm, by which it is retained. The right hand holds a pen and a manuscript.

Professor MEIZE, of the University of Rochester, has resigned his position, to accept the Chair of Modern Languages in the University of Chicago; an Institution just opened, with an endowment of $225,000.

The New-York Gallery of Art.

Some years ago a promising Institution with the above title was formed in the metropolis. A number of gentlemen subscribed and became members, the funds were expended, a number of paintings was purchased, and the hall of the Rotunda was adorned with the same, (for Uncle Sam's Post-Office people had all "gone to church" in Nassau-street. You may perhaps be able from your own memory to recall a day of glory for the "New-York Gallery of Art," when, in addition to the [illegible] owned by the Institution, the splendid series of the "Course of Empire," by COLE, the lamented, mild, gentlemanly, accomplished artist, were exhibited in our rotunda. The display was a brilliant one; comprehending, as it did, the [illegible] of two of the noblest series of landscapes which the art of America, or, perhaps, we may add, of any country, has ever produced. A rumor somewhat dampening to the hope of seeing this Institution revived, reached me some time since; to wit, that the pictures were stored away [illegible] commodious garret or vacant and richly [illegible]. The rumor, in conjunction with the fact that no exhibition of the works has taken place for years, is somewhat discouraging, all must allow. I fear that two or twelve years have elapsed since the treasures of the gallery were consigned to darkness and [illegible] eyes of the law was laid with by [illegible] and [illegible] the Art Union; and its paintings [illegible] like the life and beauty of a bed of [illegible] mise, when a sharp October frost alights upon [illegible]. After this, would it not have been well for the public-spirited citizens of New-York, with others, to have revived our all-but lost Institution? Or, [illegible] not "the New-York Gallery of Art," by a [illegible] generous compounding of means, have been [illegible] and enriched? A permanent society of [illegible] ought to have in our goodly and [illegible] City, [illegible] the lovers of the refining and beautiful art of [illegible] night at any time resort. The attraction of the Gallery would prove valuable, even in a moral point of view, by withdrawing the young from [illegible] of dissipation, and providing [illegible] of gratification to mind and [illegible]. I would suggest that the Corporation of the City [illegible] grant to the Institution. Why should not the State also bestow a respectable allowance for the same worthy object so much related to our best [illegible] of taste and liberality? Meanwhile I would [illegible] that the managers do, when they can to respect the gallery. Would it not be well for the managers to add each four or five dollars, if [illegible], to their subscriptions, and to encourage the number of [illegible] hereafter on that basis, whenever [illegible] who will not raise their subscription to [illegible]? I beg leave, also, to suggest a meeting of the [illegible] gers and life-members in order to consider and devise some plans for reviving the Institution and giving it a noble impulse. Suppose some day in the middle or close of October be designated. Yours, &c.,

A LIFE-MEMBER.

Charges Now Arrived—He is Imposed upon by the Tinker-Swindlers.

CHARLES BERW, whose name is so intimately connected with the disaster to the burnt steamer Austria, and who furnished so clear a statement of that dreadful affair, by telegraph from Halifax, arrived in this City on Friday, from Boston. Being on his way to British Columbia, he was desirous to secure a passage by the next Cunard steamer. Not being acquainted with our peculiar institutions, one of which is the bogus ticket-swindling concern, he fell an easy victim to the tribe of one of these dens, kept by WEAR & ALEXANDER, two scoundrels who lie in wait at the corner of Cedar and Greenwich streets, to take in unsuspecting strangers and ignorant emigrants. Being in haste, he was the more easily imposed upon. He was conducted to this office by a runner, and, upon inquiring of a Collins (pseudo-ticket) agent, was told that the steamer of the 5th was full, and that the only steamer in which he could get a ticket was by the one which sailed that day, at 2 o'clock, all of which they held. He was induced to pay a deposit of $25 to secure a ticket. Upon hearing, he, of course, found he had been deceived in regard to the steamer being full, and he was told that they had demanded his $5. As in all such cases, the money was refused, and a ticket at a large advance on the genuine price offered him instead. He made affidavit of the facts before the Mayor, who sent two of his myrmidons to arrest the parties who keep the den. Finding they were fairly cornered, they refunded the money. This is the end of proceedings against them, for the reason that Mr. BERW has more urgent business than dragging in New-York for several weeks to prosecute the swindlers.

The Boston Traveller has the following concerning Mr. BERW, and the awful adventure through which he passed upon the burning steamer:

"The steamer Eastern City, Capt. KILLEN, from Halifax, and Yarmouth, N. S., arrived at this port last night, and among her passengers were Mr. J. F. Cox, of Boston, and CHARLES BERW, of England, who escaped from the wreck of the steamer Austria. Although we have not seen either of them, yet we learn from others, to whom passengers at Halifax communicated the particulars of the terrible disaster, a few incidents not before published.

"When the alarm of fire was given, the passengers and crew, who rushed on deck, seemed to pause for a moment, and look aft, instinctively expecting officers to issue orders or issue that would restore discipline, but no orders having been given—no one taking the responsibility making his appearance to calm the tumult—the mob rushed towards the boats. A few only, who saw the utter folly of such a course, tried to collect their friends around them and await the issue.

"From the time the alarm was given until the flames obtained the mastery, by judicious management, every boat might have been lowered. The vessel, for five minutes, was under control—time enough to change her course so that the fire could have been kept clear of the cities. But the boats themselves were so secretly hatched and chocked, that under ordinary circumstances much time would have been required to clear them. Besides, the crew were slow in all their movements—there was no regular discipline beyond the same watch-and-watch of a common merchant vessel.

"The men had never been stationed to the boats, and consequently in the hour of peril each ran towards the boat that was nearest. One or two boats were, therefore, in possession of the crew, and the rest were left to the mercy of the passengers, hence the terrible embarrassment of lowering them.

"In most steamers, particularly those of the Cunard line, there is always a quartermaster standing near the helmsman to direct the course of the vessel; but there was no such officer in the Austria. The helmsman, therefore, had to rely for orders upon the captain or mates, and when these were out of the way was left to his own discretion. This was a bad oversight, for the quartermasters are generally the best sailors in the ship, and, in the absence of superior officers, are fully qualified to take charge. Had there been a quartermaster at the wheel of the Austria, he could not only have steered her course, but could have clapped her if he had seen it, when he saw that such was the only hope of saving the boats and the lives of those on board.

"Some of the crew, without orders, seemed to comprehend the danger, and tried to restore confidence among the passengers, but no one liked to take the responsibility of assuming command.

"The boats were actually seized upon to cut away the davits, and some of the passengers unbent the head-stalls, for the purpose of smothering the fire; but want of decision was manifest in every movement. There was no head, and the passengers saw in a few moments that it was the old game of 'every man for himself.'

"The Austria was amply supplied with fire-engines, force-pumps, hose, fire-buckets, &c., but all of these seemed to have been out of the way when required.

"Although the discipline of having a station for every man, and compelling every man to fill his station, was not the rule on board this ill-fated steamer, yet there was one system of discipline that was never relaxed, viz., securing brass-work, pointing ropes'-ends, grafting and other small work. The men were well worked but not well trained. Naturally slow, they were permitted to almost crawl along their duties, instead of being compelled to move rapidly, as is the custom in American and British ships. The captain (whom we was evidently a man of ability in the ordinary routine of a merchant ship) was neither he nor any of his officers appeared to have the experience necessary to extinguish fire of such a ship; her details were too extensive for any one of them to comprehend at a glance, and hence the miserable parts they played in this terrible tragedy.

"The boats might have been lowered, the rafts and spars might have been cut away and thrown overboard, the ship herself could have been stopped, and, in fact, hundreds of lives saved. Some of the passengers say, that the fire itself could have been suppressed by common promptness on the part of the officers, for the men never appeared to move without orders. The horrid details of the loss of life we shall not dwell upon, they have been already spread before the public; but from all we can learn, it appears that this noble vessel and her priceless freight of human life, were the victims of the inexperience of her captain and officers."

The Captain of the Maurice and Mr. Berry.

SIR: It is no want of gratitude, but a sense of duty, that prompts me to make the following correction. In your report of my statement about the Captain of the Maurice, it is said I applauded it. This is by no means the case, but quite the contrary. Whether his errors were those of the head or heart, I will not say, but his conduct was one series of blunders. I will now, since it is necessary, mention two or three. In the evening of the burning, when his life-boat came in from the steamer, there were still reported to be twenty or thirty persons clinging to the bowsprit and chains of the wreck. When the Captain was requested to send out his boats again, he said: "It is impossible; it is dark." Now his boats could have gone and returned in three-quarters of an hour. The sea was calm, only a gentle breeze blowing. It was a beautiful moonlight evening, and there were men plenty to take the boats out, yet these unfortunate creatures on the wreck were left to suffer, and probably die, for the Captain's neglect. In connection with this transaction, let me refer to HAHN, the first officer of the Austria, and who was saved. He escaped from the steamer in one of the metallic life-boats which came up to the bark uninjured. Before he reached the bark, however, he promised to return immediately, with his boat and some fresh hands, to rescue the sufferers on board the steamer, if any remained. When he came on the bark I heard him declare his intention, but not seeing him carrying it out, said: "Good heavens! mate, there are yet twenty lives on board that steamer; do not let them remain longer in their agony." He replied: "The boat is set afloat, and it is dark."

In the minute for the captain's neglect to say that the Norwegian bark was seen bearing on the steamer—for we all thought when we last saw her in the evening that the was bearing off, and we were surprised at daylight the next morning to see her by the side of the wreck. She could not from the circumstances of the wind and sea have come up until after midnight, the breeze was so light and almost dead ahead. As to the number cared by her, it will at once occur that none could have been saved.

The peculiar manner of the captain was shown when you wished him to speak the Norwegian bark in the morning. It was nearly in his line of sailing, not over three or four points south of it—but he refused doing so. It is said their life-boat sailing around the wreck was hailed. It was, if that is called speaking, when one of the passengers made the attempt at altogether a preposterous distance.

Another strange fact of the captain was not only in the manner he spoke the Lotus on the 14th ult., but in the way he acted during the transfer of the passengers. Let me speak of this latter. When his boat was first sent out to the English bark, CHAS. BERW went with it to make arrangements with the captain. The word sent back was "that the Lotus would take the American citizens, British subjects, and wanted some cold meat with which the Maurice was freighted."

We immediately made ready to leave the French bark, when the Captain hesitated to let us go. I told him I would go, and jumped with others into the boat. He ordered us out. I told him I would jump overboard and swim to the English bark if I left the boat. We succeeded in remaining, and there were women hauled into the boat before it was pushed off. These were those or four more American citizens who wished to get in with us, and were promised to be transferred when the boat returned. The Captain said he must send some codfish with the next boat, and they should go with it. After we were put upon the Lotus we expected to see the remaining three or four sent over and the fish, but instead of this we saw the boat put in the davits and the French bark sailing off.

I have mentioned these particulars to confirm my assertion that the conduct of the French Captain was not what it should have been. Of personal treatment on board the Maurice I will say nothing. We were sent are thankful to her for our lives. Allow me to say that your reporter probably erred in the name of the vessel. It was the Captain of the Lotus whom I applauded, and whose kindness was shown to the utmost of his power, both while on his vessel and in the arrangements with the captain of the steamer Prince Albert. PHILIP BERRY.

HACKENSACK, Oct. 1.

In regard to Mr. GLAUBENSKLEE's correction of my statements, I would briefly state that besides a few minor and insignificant alterations, my statements at first were correct as made in the Tribune.

The discipline on board the Austria resembled that of an old-fashioned country Fourth of July training, if I can say judge of order. It differed widely from that of the Saxonia, on which steamer I crossed in July last.

I was so far displeased with the mismanagement of the steamer that I strived to prevail with my friend Mr. SCHMIDT, to leave the steamer at Southampton and crow with another, thus being willing to forfeit my passage for the sake of feeling safe. The inefficiency of the officers and crew is sufficiently proved in the manner which they left the steamer.

If HAHN, after arriving on the Maurice, desired to return to the steamer, he could have done so. There were sufficient of the rescued passengers able to accompany him. The will was wanting, or there would have been a way.

As to letting that life-boat loose: It was altogether an unnecessary and disgraceful act. It could have been taken in tow until ready for use. He says it could not have been taken on board. This assertion, like most of his corrections, is a mere matter of option, and I believe there was room for two or three life-boats, and it could have been easily hoisted on the quarter deck, where there was room sufficient to receive it. HAHN, in all his replies to me, was vague and indefinite, and consoled himself in the loss of the boat by saying "It might float by some of the persons struggling in the water." The boat was but slightly, if at all injured. As to Mr. GLAUBENSKLEE's not hearing any cries in the water, he should remember what Mr. SMITH, of Chelsea, told him, that others could hear and see as well as he (i. e. the professor) could, I was not so fortunate that evening on board the Maurice, as Mr. G. and others were, to obtain rest under any sail cloth—but lay in the open air, resting—not sleeping—with my head on a coil of rope; and I am positive that I heard cries in the water, and urged the captain to send out his boats, but he stoutly refused.

When I speak of the Captain of the Austria leaving the steamer, I wish it explicitly understood that he did not fall into the water, but deliberately as he could, under the circumstances, he passed down a rope by the side of the steamer, attempting to get in the life-boat. I was pulling at the same fall with him, and certainly am best able to report, and that without contradiction, for I was the only one among the rescued who saw him leave the vessel and go down under the wave. Had he remained on deck giving orders, instead of putting forth his hand in attempting to save his own, or the lives of others, much might have been accomplished. When Missionary STRANG attempted to organize for drawing water, some degree of order prevailed, but the want of buckets was the only reason why nearly all did not assist. The cry on the quarterdeck was frequently heard, "Where are the officers?"

When Mr. G. says the Captain fell overboard, does he forget our conversation on board the Prince Albert, and his ignorance of how the Captain got in the water?

If Mr. G. wishes to differ from me, I will kindly request him to give his opinions independently, and not as corrections. Others have judgments as well as himself, and, at least, it would be more courteous to not so towards one who has passed with him through scenes too terrific to describe. Our mutual sufferings should make us mutually kind—remembering that

"Brethren in calamity should love."

The antagonistic spirit of his corrections pains me—they are so downright and dictatorial. He should likewise be reminded that from different stand-points we naturally viewed things differently, and also that it was possible for one to see what the other did not.

I forgot to mention that a Rev. Mr. KOCH was on board, graduate from the Barmen Theological School, and on his way to Wisconsin. He has not been heard from. PHILIP BERRY.

News from Mexico.

ARRIVAL OF A BEARER OF DISPATCHES FROM MINISTER FORSYTH—GENERAL CONDITION OF THE COUNTRY—PROBABLE CESSION OF SONORA TO THE UNITED STATES.

From the New-Orleans Picayune, Sept. 29.

By the arrival of the schooner Star, Captain GARNER, from Vera Cruz, we this morning received news from Vera Cruz and the capitol of Mexico. Our papers from Vera Cruz are four days later than had been previously received.

We are obliged also to Dr. BULLINGS for prompt and acceptable courtesies on his arrival in this city, after a protracted and somewhat exciting, not to say perilous, trip from Mexico. Dr. BULLINGS went from Vera Cruz to Havana, and thence to Key West, where he took passage for this port on the Calhoun. This steamer, as our readers know, ran ashore near St. Marks, and Dr. BULLINGS had to make the best of his way hither from that point, by traveling overland through Florida, Georgia, and Alabama, reaching New-Orleans this morning from Mobile. Dr. BULLINGS held a commission as a surgeon in the Liberal army in Mexico, under Gen. COSSONOSS. The following notes of information were obtained from him.

He brought dispatches from Mr. FORSYTH to our Government; he had also dispatches from the leaders of the Liberal Party to COSSONOSS. He represented the Liberal cause as rapidly gaining the ascendency, and expressed the opinion that, if, after a decisive battle had taken place between the two parties, Dr. BULLINGS' principal object in coming to this country is to purchase Minie rifles for the Liberal army, for which purpose he was well supplied with funds. The British Minister in Mexico acted in concert with Mr. FORSYTH in resisting the payment by foreigners of the forced loan. The French Minister had been recalled, for advising his countrymen to comply. The Doctor says that the Americans are much thought of by the Liberal party, and occupy high stations of trust. That party generally favors an American Protectorate, though opposed to annexation. They frequently contrast the security which they enjoyed of life and property during the war, when General SCOTT, with the American Army, held possession of the Government, with the robberies and murders daily committed by their own different chieftains who may happen to have the ascendancy.

The Doctor is of opinion that SONORA will soon be ceded to the United States, for a consideration.

The subjoined portion of a communication from a reliable source we received through Dr. BULLINGS:

"I have also been informed, although not from an official source, that Mr. FORSYTH, our Minister in Mexico, had finally closed the legation, but not actually demanded his passports. He had gone to Tacubaya, intending to remain there until the latter part of October. It is also asserted, and I believe with good foundation, that the British Minister in Mexico had orders from his Government to protest against the forced loan, to recommend his countrymen to refuse paying, and generally to act in the manner that Mr. FORSYTH had acted. It is further said that Mr. DE BALAC, the French Minister, had been, or was to be, recalled by his Government."

Dr. BULLINGS informed us that the health of the country was generally good, except that at Vera Cruz the yellow fever was prevailing. Another informant of reliability states explicitly that influenced Mr. FORSYTH in his determination to remain in Mexico, not wishing to expose his family to the vomito. "All vessels remaining here," says the writer alluded to, "even for but a few days, become very unsafe. Fever invariably attacks many before and many after sailing." He adds the following information:

I have talked with all the chiefs and many soldiers of both parties, but one conclusion can be seen, that is, the Liberals are daily drawing tighter the already taut reins which the Juarez Party hold, and soon the march of all detachments of the party (after beating outside troops) will concentrate upon the capital, where the Liberals are greatly in the majority.

ZULOAGA (seeing his fall close) is about to attempt to get SANTA ANNA back; but ECHEGARAY hates SANTA ANNA, and will join the Liberals, if ZULOAGA does not back out. This would end all.

The Liberals are delighted at FORSYTH's being sustained by our Government; and particularly are they pleased that our diplomatic relations are at an end, sine die.

I was among and conversed with ECHEGARAY's and ZAMORA's troops the day of their fight on the 17th ult., near Jalapa.

The soldiers said to me: "We are opposed to fighting our brothers; we hate this atros revolution, and would go over to any side to end it, but the Church Party we cannot ever join." The fight was pretty serious. Twenty-five on one side and eighty on the other, were killed.

The Vera Cruz Progreso, of the 8th inst., announces that Gen. ECHEVERRIZAR died in the capital on the 1st inst.; also, that Gen. D. EZEQUIEL ROMAN had been nominated Zulocagista Governor of the State of Queretaro, and Col. MARIANO REYES, Political Chief of the Territory of Huribide.

Letters from Guaymas, of the 25th, state that the frontier forces had moved from San Luis towards that place, the main body remaining in Jaral.

Reports had been published in the Pensamiento, of Guadalajara, that, in an action at Acambaro, the Constitutionalists had had 500 men slain; but the Progreso ridicules this, and affects to see in the subsequent course of the Pensamiento good reason to believe that a very different result had been experienced.

The Progreso gives an account of the manner in which Señor ROMAN was treated of Vera Cruz, on his return thither, after he had vainly endeavored to land at Tampico. A boat was sent from the Spanish ship Cortes to the British steamer Clyde, and took thence D. MANUEL ROMAN PRIMERA, D. JOSE R. DE CASTRO, Señor EXPRESO of the Mexican Legation at Washington, and a servant. The reason of permission to land being refused them is said to be that Señor ROMAN is considered dangerous to the public tranquillity, and that Señor DE CASTRO is still under the ban of a decree of expulsion for the same reason. The Progreso adds that some of the fugitive chiefs from Tampico who were on board the Clyde, having endeavored to go with them to the Cortes, the officer in command of the boat refused to receive them, stating that he had instructions to receive those named only.

Colonel CAVEDA issued a very spirited address to the inhabitants of Tampico on taking possession of the City, calling on them to go on undisturbed with their affairs, and exhorting them to exert themselves for the effecting of peace, the securing of guarantee, and general conciliation.

A letter, dated the 24 inst., from the capital, is stated by the Progreso to make the following announcement: "ZULOAGA is extremely disgusted with ECHEGARAY, and talks seriously of appointing a successor in him. In fact, he proposed to FERREIRA that he should go and take command of the troops; but he roundly refused, and, too, being pressed, said he really did not wish to fight against VERA CRUZANOS. Subsequently he is said to have proposed to D. MIGUEL MIRAMON to go and send ECHEGARAY to the capital, promising for this service some thousands of dollars and the rank of full General."

Several instances of shooting by the half dozen of prisoners taken by the reactionists are recorded.

A communication, dated on the 7th inst., on board the British steamer Clyde, furnishes particulars of interest, which are subjoined. They are through Mr. FORSYTH's special bearer of dispatches:

"A long passage in a sailing man-of-war, at this hurricane and vomito season, are the chief objections to our Minister's coming home on the Plymouth, which had not yet arrived, although due twenty days since, according to orders. Why not send the Niagara, to let all foreigners know in Vera Cruz, and the Mexicans, see that we too have steamers to boast of, and are willing to back our Minister's course, indorsed as it is by the Government, and approved and applauded by all foreigners in Mexico? Nothing could produce so express an effect as such a mark (just now) of appreciation, and of intention to look to Mexico with earnestness of purpose.

ZULOAGA is lost, and the only hope of his party is in the return of SANTA ANNA; and this he Generals (especially the chief, ECHEGARAY) positively ridicule, because it would be fatal to them.

ROBLES was not permitted to land at Vera Cruz from the British steamer Clyde, on the 28th ult.; was taken to Tampico, and just in time to be too late, for CARVAJAL would not listen to him there. He came back to Vera Cruz, and on the morning of our departure, managed to get aboard a Spanish vessel-of-war lying five miles off. People of sense think he might have been recalled by ZULOAGA to take the reins on his abdication, ROBLES being popular.

The success of the Liberals in all parts save the capital and its environs—and there they but wait opportunity—is a subject of daily discourse in almost every city or town. Still, inactivity may mar their hopes.

The commander of Tampico, Gen. MAHIN, and several officers, (poor men! with bandaged heads,) are aboard—for any port not in their own country.

Great pecuniary trouble, and much real distress, from deaths, hopelessness, mortification and despair of peace, are visibly apparent.

JUAREZ is honest, ZAMORA enthusiastic, ECHEGARAY foxy, wavering and silent; NIGRETE, as drill-master, seems desirous to prepare troops to whip the Liberals, whom he so lately most dastardly betrayed and deserted.

The hospitals are still pretty full. Out of 500 men (and a fine set of fellows, too,) who came in a short time since, only about 200 remain. The saddest effect the mind receives, after all, comes from dreadful vomito's silent but fearful strength, marked in every vessel, at all the hospitals, and through the streets. Twenty-five days in Vera Cruz thus impressed me.

On the day of my departure, the 5th inst., a force was preparing to march on Jalapa, ECHEGARAY's headquarters. I think he will come over to ZAMORA's views.

Nine successive stages were robbed, en route up, and all are, in fact, if any prospect of a few dollars present. But few, therefore, either go or come.

Every one, interested ones excepted, approves FORSYTH's course, and hopes better days from our strong arm. This sentiment, I find, is general—unanimous, but for a few expectants.

I wish to correct a misstatement in one of your numbers sent.

Mr. COOLIDGE, captured at Orizaba, was liberated at the immediate mediation of Mr. FORSYTH, and no one else. GARDINER, the Englishman, it is true, used his influence, (and it is great at Orizaba, for he is very highly respected,) but without avail; and COOLIDGE was taken off with others to be shot at Rueleta. ZULOAGA, at FORSYTH's personal request or solicitation, procured his release unconditionally. Mr. C. afterwards waited on ZULOAGA, with our Secretary of Legation, WALKER FEARN, and thanked that functionary.

The Canals—Action of the Canal Commissioners.

At a meeting of the Board of Canal Commissioners at the City Hall, Oct. 1, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, It satisfactorily appears to the Canal Commissioners, by the representations of sundry persons engaged in building boats adapted to the Enlarged Erie Canal, including as well those propelled by steam as those drawn by animal power, that they cannot safely proceed in building boats in large numbers, without some suitable assurance that a channel at least forty-five feet and seven feet deep can be secured to the Canal by the opening of navigation next Spring;

And whereas, It also satisfactorily appears to the Canal Commissioners, that such channels can be secured by that time, throughout the whole line from Albany to Buffalo, at an expense not exceeding $200,000, provided the present Canal across the Cayuga Marshes, about five miles in length, can be deepened one foot—the cost of which is estimated at $16,500;

And whereas, Such excavation being an "extraordinary repair," can only be made with the consent of the Canal Board, who, on application, have this day declined to grant their consent; therefore,

Resolved, That the Canal Commissioners will present a special communication, setting forth the facts and necessities of the case to the Governor of this State, in such sufficient season before the meeting of the next Legislature, as will enable him to bring the subject to their notice, and enable them to take immediate action, empowering the Canal Commissioners to cause such excavation through the Cayuga Marshes to be made, and also to secure a channel seven feet deep throughout the line from Albany to Buffalo, to be ready by the opening of navigation next Spring—with power also to excavate a similar channel in the Oswego Canal, to be ready at the same time.

Fugitive Slave in New-London—The Slave Free.

From the Norwich (Conn.) Courier, Sd.

We understand there was a sudden and stirring breeze of excitement in New-London yesterday. A coasting vessel, owned in New-London or Groton, arrived in port with a fugitive slave on board—said slave having smuggled himself with a jug of water and a ham on board the schooner, as she lay at the wharf of one of the North Carolina ports. He continued to lie low and keep dark until the vessel was far on her voyage home. The Captain could not, of course, afford to put back all the way to North Carolina for the purpose of restoring the fugacious chattel. He did the next best thing, however: he arrested the runaway, not by due process of law, but upon his own responsibility, conducted him to the Custom-house and delivered him into the charge and safe-keeping of Collector MATHER, to be sent on board the revenue cutter. News of what had been done soon got into the street. State-Attorney WILLEY was forthwith impressed into drawing up a writ of habeas corpus to be used if occasion required, while Judge BRANDEGEE and Dr. MINER started for the Custom-house. They found the Customs Collector and his sable companion sitting very quietly and peacefully together in improving social converse. The Judge asked the Collector if he held the colored gentleman by any legal authority? The Collector said, he. The Doctor asked the darkey if he desired to go back to old North Carolina? The darkey said, No. Then out and run, said the Doctor. And out he did, drawing a bee-line for Canada. The last heard from him he was going at a 2.40 pace through the neighboring town of Salem. Meanwhile Collector MATHER, by way of saving the Union and his collectorship, got out a handbill, offering a reward of $50 for the apprehension and return of the ungrateful chattel. We have not heard that there was found any hound in New-London mean enough to follow on the fugitive's track, even for fifty pieces of silver.

Attack of the Indians on a Pembina Train—The Fraser River Party.

We find the following letter from J. MCFERRIDGE, Collector of Customs at Pembina, in the St. Paul Pioneer and Democrat:

"It is with regret that I have to announce the murder of three of our people by the Sioux of the Plains. They were on their way from St. Paul, and were within one day's march of Pembina, when the party (only four in number) was attacked by a party of nine Sioux. Three of our men were instantly killed and scalped; the remaining one of the party luckily made his escape.

I think it is high time that the Government should do something for our part of Minnesota. As for the Fort which is now being built on Red River, near Point Graham, it is no more protection to our traders there is Fort Ripley.

The Sioux of the Plains have hung around Pembina and St. Joseph all Summer; and as the most of our people were either at St. Paul or on the Plains, laying in provisions for the Winter, the few who were left at home to make hay and take care of the cattle, were afraid to go out.

The Sioux killed and scalped a man within twenty feet of his own door, at St. Joseph, in the month of July.

These are facts, and should be attended to, as there are a great many of our people moving down the River to the Selkirk settlement, on account of the danger from the Indians, and the failure on the part of the Government to protect the settlers."

Interesting from Syria.

The Boston Traveller has seen a letter from Beyrout, dated Aug. 21, in which it is stated that the American Consul for that place had arrived there about the middle of July, with his family, and that the raising of the flag of the Consulate, for the first time in sixteen months, was a pleasant sight for the American residents. The trial of the Jaffa criminals was then in progress; and it was regretted that the Dixon family, whose numbers were thinned by the Arabs there, had returned to America, as it was feared that some of the miscreants might escape punishment by lack of means for their identification. It will be recollected that the remainder of this family, who belong in Massachusetts, reached Boston but a few days since.

A rumor of disturbances at Mount Lebanon had reached Beyrout, and the Pasha there, who is only second in dignity to the Grand Vizier, had, upon the representations of the Consuls at that place, dispatched a troop of soldiers to quell the rebellion, as well as to protect the foreigners. A number of missionaries, on their way to different parts of Palestine, went at Beyrout, awaiting the execution of the Jaffa criminals, fearing that it might cause a general insurrection throughout the country, and preferring to remain under the protection of the guns of the men-of-war collected in the harbor.

UNKNOWN WOMAN RUN OVER AND KILLED.—On Saturday afternoon an unknown woman was run over in Greenwich-street, near Vesey, by a horse and cart,—the latter loaded with iron bars—and instantly killed. The driver, SAMUEL COVENTRY, was immediately arrested to await the result of the Coroner's inquest which was held yesterday. The evidence showed that the deceased ran suddenly in front of the cart, and was run over before the driver could stop the horse. A verdict of "accidental death" was rendered, and the driver was discharged. The deceased was about 35 years of age, slender, of medium height, with dark hair and blue eyes. She had on a calico dress, striped petticoat, old gaiters and overshoes. The Coroner ordered that the body be kept a day or two, at No. 108 Leonard-street, for identification.

DEAD CHILD THROWN INTO ASH BARREL.—A rag-picker on Saturday morning found the dead body of an infant in an ash-barrel in Rector-street. Coroner GARNER held an inquest on the body, and it was discovered that CATHARINE WIMPLEBY, a married woman living at No. 9 Rector-street, gave birth to the child at 1 o'clock in the morning; that it was born dead, and was not her husband's; and that the mother threw it into the barrel. A verdict was rendered in accordance with these facts.

FATAL FALL.—FREDERICK WILDMAN, a painter, while intoxicated, fell yesterday from the roof of his residence, No. 537 Pearl-street, and was killed instantly. An inquest was held and verdict rendered accordingly. The deceased was 33 years of age, unmarried, and has relatives living in Troy.

SUICIDE.—WILLIAM SCHAT, a German, who lived at No. 386 Pearl-street, died yesterday at the City Hospital from the effects of taking arsenic. An inquest will be held on the body to-day.

CORRECTION.—We mistook in calling the brave yacht that beat the Rebecca to the Southwest Spit and the Light-ship, the Monmouth. Her name is the Monmouth, after the island on which her owner, Mr. CROMWELL, resides. She was built by Mr. KISSAM, of Rye.

COMMISSIONERS OF HEALTH.—The Commissioners met on Saturday, at noon. The Susquehanna was allowed to proceed. Permission to come up was granted to three or four other vessels, and the Board adjourned to Monday.

FIRE ON STATEN ISLAND.—A fire broke out yesterday, about 12 o'clock, in an occupied house on with Townsend-avenue, Clifton, which, together three adjoining buildings and a carpenter shop, were destroyed. All the buildings were owned by WM. B. TOWNSEND, Esq.

Great Fire at Greensburg, Penn.

From the Evening Bulletin, Sept. 27.

THE RECENT FIRE AT GREENSBURG, PENN.—It is a comfort and consolation to know that while extensive fires must happen, bringing in their train loss and suffering sometimes to a great extent, that even these may have their "alleviations," as the following letter fully proves. And that no person has a right to complain of the loss of books, papers, and other valuables, while such securities as the one named below are so easily procured.

GREENSBURG, Sept. 25, 1858.

To Messrs. Farrel, Herring & Co., No. 130 Walnut-st., Philadelphia:

GENTLEMEN: One of the most destructive fires that has ever occurred in our place, happened on Tuesday, the 22d inst., burning some twenty-five buildings. I had one of your Herring's Patent Fire-Proof Safes in a building that was destroyed. The safe was subjected to an intense heat. It was taken from the fire the following day, and the door-gear the handle was still red hot. It contained books and a number of papers, loose and in bundles, which were not damaged in the slightest. It gives me pleasure to add to the accumulated evidences of the safety and reliability of your safes.

Yours, truly, J. TURNEY.

$1,000 REWARD will be paid to any person that can show that a HERRING'S PATENT CHAMPION SAFE ever failed to preserve its contents in an accidental fire. S. C. HERRING & CO.,

INSTRUCTION.

MOUNT WASHINGTON COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, No. 256 4th-av., (formerly No. 164 Madison-st.,) on Washington-square, opened its fifteenth Academic year on Monday, Sept. 13, 1858.

This is a Private High School, furnishing the pupil with a solid and finished education. Numerous testimonials of this City, as well as many others, can testify to the thoroughness with which pupils of this Institution have, during the past fifteen years, completed their academic course. The location is unsurpassed. The Principals, who devote themselves to supervision and instruction, erected and arranged the building expressly for the institution. They employ ten accomplished professors and teachers.

The rooms and furniture have been thoroughly renovated, and a stage is employed daily to convey small boys at a distance to and from the school.

Students preparing for the Sophomore Class of College have just commenced the Freshmen Course. Classes in Surveying and higher Mathematics generally, are in process of formation. Those in French, German, Spanish, Book-keeping, Commercial Arithmetic, Penmanship, Drawing and Painting are already arranged.

One of the Principals takes special charge of the younger scholars, who are received under superior advantages at seven years of age. An effectual method for acquiring a correct use of English and of eradicating all errors in spelling is in successful operation.

The building is well ventilated throughout, and pupils of all the departments enjoy at the recesses cheerful open-air exercise in the retired playground of Washington-square.

Parents are particularly invited to visit this unique establishment during its daily sessions, and witness the character and mode of the instruction imparted. Circulars procured at the Institute and at the Broadway bookstores contain full particulars. Acquaintances of its present patrons are referred to them for reliable information, viz.: Rev. George Potts, D. D., Rev. Charles Fletcher, Hon. W. J. Havemeyer, Hon. Henry E. Davies, Hon. Wm. Tucker, Joseph Worster, M. D., Jas. C. Rennedy, M. D., A. N. Gunn, M. D., Mr. John H. LONG ISLAND.

HYDROPHOBIA.—About the middle of August last a boy named PATRICK MADDEN, residing on Hamilton-avenue, near Mill-street, while on Van Brunt-street was attacked by a dog, and severely bitten by him in the face. The injured boy was taken to the Long Island College Hospital, where the usual remedies were applied, and the wound soon healed. He returned to his home and enjoyed his general good health until Thursday last, when unmistakable symptoms of hydrophobia appeared. Medical aid was immediately called, but all efforts to aid him proved futile, and last evening the unfortunate youth was suffering all the pangs of this fearful malady, and it was supposed that he could not survive the night. Several hogs, and one or two dogs, bitten by the same rabid dog, were instantly killed, and thus further mischief was prevented.

ANOTHER CASE OF YELLOW FEVER—A VESSEL SUBJECT TO QUARANTINE.—The Health Officer received information, yesterday morning, of a case of yellow fever on board of a vessel lying in the Atlantic Basin. As soon as practicable he visited the vessel, which proved to be the pilot-boat Mary Dixon, and in the Government service. The Health Officer found a sailor on board, who had been sick with the yellow fever for several days, and he at once ordered the vessel and crew to Quarantine. The order was promptly obeyed.

ACCIDENTS.—MICHAEL GILLEN, a boy residing on Hamilton-avenue, was on Friday evening seriously injured on Hamilton-avenue, near the ferry, by being run over by a team driven by WILLIAM BURNS, of Bay Ridge. Mr. BURNS was arrested by Officer HAYS, of the Third Precinct.

ANDREW MANN, a boy 12 years old, fell from a fence on South First-street, near Union-avenue, Saturday, and received a fracture of one arm.

A man named Jesse McFARLANE, of No. 23 State-street, while intoxicated, on Friday night last, was knocked down by a man with whom he quarrelled, and, falling, broke his right arm in such a manner that it will probably be stiff for life. He was taken to the Long Island College Hospital.

ARREST FOR BURGLARY.—A man, who gives his name as WILLIAM H. LEHAGUE was arrested by the Third Precinct Police, at an early hour yesterday morning, on suspicion of having attempted to rob the house of Captain GERARDUS, on Degraw-street. The accused, with an accomplice, entered the house and made a partial examination of the premises, when their presence was discovered. The accomplice escaped.

ALLEGED OUTRAGE.—THOMAS MORAN and THOMAS DUGGY were arrested Saturday night by Officer WEBSTER, of the Third Precinct, on a charge preferred by ANN KENNEDY, for committing an outrage upon her person. The complainant states that the accused met her on Baltic-street, near Fifth-avenue, Saturday evening, and forced her into a vacant lot. The examination will take place to-day before Justice [illegible].

FIRE.—About 11 o'clock Saturday night, Mrs. [illegible], residing at the corner of Ninth and North First-streets, while preparing to retire for the night, accidentally set the mattress of her bed on fire. Before she had time to extinguish the whole bed was in a blaze. Mrs. [illegible]'s escape from serious injury was owing to the fact of her having on a woolen [illegible].

FATAL ACCIDENT.—The Rev. Father DOLAN, of the Roman Catholic Church, died at Flatbush Saturday from the effect of injuries received a few days before, being thrown out of a wagon on the Flatbush Plank Road.

LAUNCHED.—A new bark, called Martinho de Melo, was launched from the yard of Messrs. WEST & BILLIN, Greenpoint, on Saturday last. She was built for the Portuguese Government, at a cost of about [illegible]. She is 127 feet long, 31½ feet breadth of beam, and 18 feet hold.

CORRECTION.—It was ALDEN J. SPOONER, Esq., and not Alderman SPOONER, as we were made to say in the Times of Saturday morning, who delivered the annual address before the Putnam County Agricultural Society last week.

DROWNED.—GEORGE MAGOU, a boy 13 years old, was accidentally drowned Friday evening while fishing at the foot of South Sixth-street.

MORTALITY.—There were only 101 deaths in Brooklyn during the week ending Saturday last; of these the population claimed 11, [illegible] 16, diarrhœa 10, fever 6, and small-pox 1.

COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS.

[illegible]

MONDAY, Oct. 4—A. M.

The Foreign Trade at the port of New-York for the past week shows a total Import entry, including the Dry Goods table in our last paper, of $3,303,960 as against $2,596,054 the corresponding period last year. The Export clearances of Domestic Produce and Miscellaneous Goods are $1,079,315, against $1,627,240 the same week last season. The Export of Specie, including $447,467 by the Vanderbilt for France on Saturday, is $1,126,404, as against $422,000 same week last year. In addition to this, $400,000 went to Philadelphia and New-Orleans. The Customs paid into the Sub-Treasury during the week amount to $528,000, while the disbursements from the office are $737,481 in excess of these and other receipts. The deliveries of California Gold on Wednesday amount to $1,570,000. The apparent difference made by these various movements in the Bank reserve is $781,000, though the whole of this may not be shown on the average of the week, to be made up this afternoon. The last average stood $28,635,831. The almost unvarying cheapness of Money at this season of the year attracts much remark in the Street. The rates on temporary employment are as low as in the months of June and July, and the accumulation in the Trust and Savings' offices, where a small interest is allowed on deposits, at fixed notice, is very large. The Stock Brokers get money at from 3 to 4 ⅌ cent. ⅌ annum, and the Bill Brokers at from 3½ to 4½ ⅌ cent., returnable at call. Short Bills, of approved first-class names, are discounted at 4@5, and long dates, at 5½@7 ⅌ cent. There is more business doing on the Stock Exchange, particularly in the regular dividend-paying shares and Bonds, and considerable orders are being executed in State Stocks at a rise of ½@1 ⅌ cent.; Panama, Pacific Mail, New-York Central and Galena shares at an improvement of 2@3 ⅌ cent., and a few of the Railway Bonds, for parties who have grown tired of holding their means comparatively idle in the expectation of a better employment in mercantile paper. The Foreign Exchanges ruled firm for last Wednesday's packet, and would have required a larger use of Bullion but for the transmission of about $500,000 or $600,000 in Stocks to England. For Saturday's steamer there was a better offering of mercantile bills, growing out of heavy sales of Cotton, in transitu, and the rate on London was ¼@½ easier; we quote merchant bills 109¾@109¾; Bank, 109¾, sales. Francs, 5.13¾@5.12½ to the dollar.

As we expect in a day or two to be able to present the official Clearing-House return of the Foreign Trade movement for the month of September just closed, we omit this morning our usual comparative summary (semi-official) by weeks. The apparent decrease in the entry of Foreign Merchandise since the 1st January to the close of the past week at New-York, is seventy-two millions dollars.

COURSE OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE FOR THE WEEK.

As remarked above, the increased activity of the week was mainly felt upon the dividend stocks. The rapid advance of Panama, to 120 early in the week, brought forward a few sellers, and the stock fell back for a day or two to 117½ ⅌ cent. The subsequent demand again put the price up to 118¾@118¾. The speculation in Pacific Shares was unusually animated, and, of course, quite interesting. The variations in a single day were as much as 6 ⅌ cent., but at the close of the week the sales ranged from 105½ to 104¾ ⅌ cent. We understand the recent advance and activity in the Stock have added about 100 new names to the list of stockholders, making the whole 700 in good part widely distributed in small lots. The transactions in New-York Central, during the week, were little short of 36,000 shares, or an average, including the Street sales, of about six thousand shares a day. There was a steady advance after the publication of the final Convention between the leading four lines to the West, to 81¼ ⅌ cent., from which price on Saturday afternoon there was a moderate reaction to 81⅛@¼ ⅌ cent. The amount of buyers' options, 30@60 days, taken for the Bull account, was quite large, at 80½@81¼ ⅌ cent., in addition to which there was a good share of strong buyers for cash. The advance in Galena is equal to 2½ ⅌ cent. Some sales of Lake Shore (Erie and Cleveland) were made as high as 115½ ⅌ cent. The improvement in the non-dividend and Western Roads was less decided, while in Erie shares there was a sudden decline after the closing of the books for the annual meeting, to 15½ ⅌ cent. The unsecured Bonds of the Company hold steady at 20@22½ ⅌ cent. For the New Loan of the United States, after the last Foreign mail, there was an improved inquiry, but no offering of any considerable parcels. A few opening sales have been made in London at a price to justify about 104@104½ ⅌ cent., in this market, less the banker's commission, interest to run from 1st January next. This arrangement of interest will probably continue to check the freedom of operations in both markets for a few weeks longer, but there seems to be good reason to believe that, like most of our previous Federal Loans, the Stock will be gradually absorbed abroad at a liberal advance on the original award. There is nothing so good on the Foreign list of the London Exchange, at par in sterling money, which would give 109@110 here. The Treasury Department has still the entire sum of this loan and the premiums upon it, subject to draft. At the close of September the undrawn balances in the various depositories amounted to $10,808,884. The Bank of Commerce holds $1,409,000 for its own account. The Bank of the Republic has placed its $100,000 with the Bank Department in Albany as a basis of circulation, [illegible]

[illegible] Bank shares have sold at 7@7½ ⅌ cent. Most of the other City Bank shares are firm and in request. The last sales (on Friday and Saturday) of the Illinois Central shares were exclusive of the Scrip dividend, the value of which is variously reckoned at $2 50@$3 50 ⅌ share. The stock was quoted, at the close, at 79½ ex dividend. The Bonds are fair and in request for England, as well as to pay in for lands in Illinois. The Land absorption is about $60,000 a month. The Six ⅌ cents of the New-York Central have advanced to 92 ⅌ cent. The movement in Reading shares is less active, though the price rules steady. The Coal tonnage of the Road, last week, was 36,991 tons, as against 24,009 the same week last season. The total, since the 1st December, (beginning of the fiscal year,) is 1,216,432 tons, against 1,447,529 tons last year. The general market, on Saturday afternoon, left off somewhat dull.

We have taken no part, hitherto, in the discussion of the experiment of a Bullion Bank in this City. The proposition is to create a capital of a million of dollars, to be permanently invested in 7 ⅌ cent. Bond and Mortgage, as the basis of an office of deposit exclusively in Gold and Silver, the deposits to be held sacred for the check of the depositor, and a small charge to be made by the Bank for their safe keeping. This charge must necessarily constitute almost the only profit to the stockholders, as the simple interest on a million of dollars will scarcely more than support the machinery of the office and the taxes upon the capital. But, assuming the profit of the concern as a secondary consideration, the question turns upon the feasibility of an exclusive Bank for the safe-keeping, without employment, of Bullion belonging to individual depositors. Will the latter pay for such service while the Bank of Commerce, with ten millions of capital as security, down to the Chemical Bank, with $300,000 capital, $600,000 surplus, and an old and unquestionably safe management as security, offer to keep the money for nothing? In another view, is such an experiment adapted to or consistent with the business habits and active commercial genius of our people, or the estimate which they place upon Bullion as a currency per se? We believe there is little doubt that the answer of a vast majority of the public to both queries would be in the negative, upon the most thorough canvass of the subject; provided no special sufficient reason is shown for revolutionizing our currency and banking laws at the present time.

Such a reason has been sought for by the advocates of the scheme in the events of the late crisis. Yet all parties must recollect how little the intrinsically superior value of Gold over our New-York secured paper currency had to do with the explosion of the 13th October, or the subsequent restoration of confidence. In three days after that event, no one wanted Gold as a currency. It returned to bank with greater rapidity than it left it. The premium fell to a mere fraction, and this was only paid on an export demand. For domestic uses, this precious metal was a drug. It could not buy our New-York State Stocks, to be lodged at Albany as a basis for Bank Notes, except at a premium on the latter, after the first depression and excitement had passed over. Our City Banks found $8,000,000 of Country Bank Notes, so secured, a far more profitable reserve than Gold, and collected these notes, with 6 ⅌ cent. interest, free of loss. In the midst of the run upon ten Banks by their depositors, this secured paper circulation was, in many instances, preferred to Gold. The crisis was never ascribed, with any degree of plausibility, to the unsoundness of the New-York currency. It was said by many to be the result of the abuse and inflation of credits, outside the ordinary volume of bank-note circulation. By others, the final turn of the crisis upon the Banks themselves, after the merchants had been broken down, was charged to the unwise and cruel separation during a common trouble of mercantile and bank fortune; in the policy of what were then called the strong banks, to save themselves at the cost of their more liberal neighbors and at the sacrifice of their own suffering customers. The end was a common calamity; and looking back to all that occurred through the six weeks that preceded general suspension, it is difficult to see how it could have been otherwise. Our own deliberate conclusion now is that the Banks would have saved a world of mischief by shutting down specie payments on the 26th of September, on the announcement of the Philadelphia disaster. It was only the apprehension, which in the end proved groundless, that the State Constitution was inflexible on the subject, that prolonged the struggle. State and City pride had something to do with it, but this was soon humbled before the bitter trial which the struggle had brought upon the mercantile community. Seeing and feeling this, the heaviest of the Bank depositors, as if by preconcert, on the 13th October, ended the ruinous scene of desperation, and relief was at once felt, and the gold which had been withdrawn, partly as a lesson, and partly for some supposed premium that the metal might be worth, soon returned to bank again. But the crisis extended with terrible effect to London and Hamburg, partly from the same cause, the accumulation of vast stores of Foreign and Colonial produce and home manufactures, which were being fired upon at highly speculative prices, and consigned and held immensely in advance of legitimate consumption. The Bullion principle of Sir ROBERT PEEL'S Bank Act failed, as it had done once before, to avert the calamity in London. The temporary suspension of this act was decreed by the Queen, in Council, as the virtual suspension of the same principle in the New-York Constitution was decreed by our Courts. The necessities of the emergency were alike superior to law and Constitution, and the exclusive Bullion theorists were hopelessly at fault in both countries, until the extraordinary prerogative of the Crown and the Courts restored order. In Hamburg the case was still more striking, approaching as the Bank of Hamburg does, to the very model of the proposed Bullion Bank in this City. That old establishment is an exclusive office of deposit, recognizing nothing but Bullion, and deriving its entire profits from the small charge made for the safe-keeping of its deposits. The inscription of these deposits and their frequent transfer from hand to hand by checks drawn against them, constitute the sole currency of the commercial machinery of Hamburg. The Bills of the merchants are drawn and accepted as in mere banks, and are paid by checks upon the bank, where credits in bullion perform as many offices in a day as the mercantile transactions of the whole city demand, until general distrust or adverse exchanges withdraw the bullion itself and the system explodes, as it did in December, in universal panic and terrible bankruptcy. There is no other city in the world where the crisis was so intense. The Bank was exhausted of all means of relief, and, indeed, of all attributes of business when its Bullion was withdrawn from active employment. The Bullion principle itself proved only a snare to wide-spread mischief—the striking down of all credit and the blotting out, for the moment, of every representative of value and every medium for conducting the ordinary commerce of the city. This principle found few imitators in Europe before this severe test of its usefulness. Surely it seems too late after this trial and failure to talk seriously of engrafting it upon the free and enlightened system of New-York.

In reference to the pending election of the Erie Company, nearly all our City cotemporaries have something to say. The Tribune alleges that Mr. MORAN will hardly surrender voluntarily so fat a salary. The Herald adds that there is no reason to suppose his colleagues desire to turn him out, although "it is pretty generally considered that his administration has not been as felicitous as his emoluments are liberal." The Express indorses the nomination of Mr. NATHANIEL MAREN, adding that:

"The interests of the road, whether as regards the stock or the bonds, could not be trusted to safer or abler hands. In the prosperity of the road, as in its adversity, he has rendered services not inferior in value to those of any officer, executive or otherwise, who has been connected with the Company. One thing only seems settled as to the Presidency of the road. It is that the salary should be reduced from $25,000 to the amount paid to first-class men in similar [illegible]

The Evening Post, speaking of what it is pleased to term the repeated grumbling about Mr. MORAN'S liberal salary, of Saturday its morning contemporaries.

We have little to add to our previous remarks on this subject, although we deem it no more "unworthy" to call the attention of the stockholders to the fact that this experiment of paying four salaries to one man has proved a costly failure. To have divided one salary to four men could not well have been worse for either stock or bondholder. We have no particular feeling in favor of a change of administration, and deem it quite probable that none will be made, unless Mr. MAREN, who usually holds the controlling proxies of the absent shareholders, should consent to it. But as the rule of the past year has not been a fortunate one, any more than it has been a very dignified or peaceable one, tending to substantial reform and good neighborhood, or the elevation of the general credit of the concern, we have deemed it proper, and mean to enjoy the liberty of saying so. Notwithstanding which, if the stockholders elect to continue Mr. MORAN, on lower and more rational pay, and his friends believe that he is now in the right course to bring the Company out of its difficulties, requiring only time and a less embarrassing year than the past to do so, nothing will afford us greater pleasure than to contribute every reasonable support to such further experiment.

Real Estate.—SATURDAY, Oct. 2.

Here is another gem in its way, and we give all the parties concerned the full benefit, without charge, of one insertion of their advertisement in the columns of a paper that is not only extensively circulated, but well known and generally read:

SUPREME COURT.—JANE H. WHITEMORE vs. ALFRED WHITEMORE and others.—In pursuance of a judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of New-York, made on the 6th day of September, 1858, in the above-entitled action, will be sold under the direction of the subscriber, at the Merchants' Exchange in the City of New-York, at public auction, on the 24 day of October next, at 12 o'clock at noon, by Philip R. Wilkins, Auctioneer:

All that certain lot of land, with the buildings thereon, situated in the City and County of New-York, and known and distinguished by the number three hundred and nine (309) Bleecker-street.

CHAS. MONELL, Referee.

WM. H. SOUTH, Plaintiff's Attorney.

In accordance with the above advertisement, No. "309" was duly put up by Mr. WILKINS for sale. After the property was put up, the following dialogue occurred:

1st GENT.—Mr. WILKINS, where abouts is No. "309"?

Mr. WILKINS—I don't know, Sir, where it is, except that it is in Bleecker-street.

SECOND GENTLEMAN—Mr. WILKINS, what is the size of that lot?

Mr. WILKINS—I don't know, Sir, what the size of the lot is; I have never been informed.

FIRST GENTLEMAN—Well, can you tell us what the size of the house is? How are we to bid on it when we know nothing at all about dimensions, size, quality or anything?

Mr. WILKINS—I am very sorry, gentlemen, that I have no other information to give you than what is contained in the advertisement I have just read to you. How much is bid for No. 309? Give me a bid.

$5,000 was bid by the representative of the plaintiff, and No. 309 was of course struck down to her.

FIRST GENTLEMAN—(muttering)—That sale ought to be, and I believe can be, set aside.

We have only to add that the terms of sale were all cash, to be paid at the moment of sale.

Messrs. RAYNOR & BLACKWELL report the sale, for R. W. MARTIN, Esq., of his two lots, 22.6 by 66.6 feet each, on the south side of Thirty-fourth-street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues, and between Mr. Aaron's property on the east, and Mr. MILLER'S house on the west, for the sum of $19,000, with a builder's loan of $12,000. Mr. CORNLINE, the builder, designs erecting thereon two four-story brown-stone houses.

Mr. W. H. LUSE reports the sale for A. WARTS, Esq., of two full lots on the northwest corner of Twenty-fourth-street and Fourth-avenue, for $22,000. The buyer, Mr. LEWIS SCHNEIR, designs, as we understand, to build thereon four or five small houses. The plan of building small, good houses, in good neighborhoods, is one that we never fail to encourage. And such gentlemen as Mr. SCHNEIR and THOMAS C. SCHEY, Esq., who is just finishing some very desirable small houses on the corner of Thirty-third-street and Madison-avenue, must be well remunerated for, we have never known, and we believe no one else has ever known, a solitary instance of a well-built house, in a prime neighborhood, going a begging for either a buyer or a tenant, because it was too small. There is not a respectable broker in town that will not tell any first-class builder that he can sell for him a hundred such houses if he will only go ahead and build them.

Mr. LUSE also informs us that Mr. B. SHEW is building three brown-stone houses on the south side of Twenty-sixth-street, opposite the Harlem Railroad Company's grounds, between Fourth and Madison avenues, each 16.8x84 feet.

Also, that Mr. PURDY is building a 25x60 feet brown-stone house on the north side of Twenty-fourth-street, in the rear of the above lots, sold to Mr. SCHNEIR.

The Coal Trade.

From the Miners' Journal.

The quantity sent by railroad, this week, is [illegible]

The supply from this region shows an increase over last week of 4,[illegible] tons, the aggregate being 20,416 tons over the corresponding week last year. Our shipping will continue for some time, and, as the Canal has not been in the market of the season, and, since the Canal has opened every other branch of business was largely affected. This business was felt severely by the anthracite region, and our trade received at least one-third for a period of eight weeks. This accounts for the large increase this week, and we will continue to increase for the shipments of last year for the ensuing four weeks.

The trade stands up this week as follows:

	1857.	1858.
Schuylkill—Railroad	34,604	35,591
Schuylkill—Canal	35,308	45,740
Lehigh—Railroad	9,999	16,195
Lehigh—Canal	30,521	31,126
